

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 14, 1860.

WE have on former occasions called the attention of our readers to the entire failure of the Statute-law Commission, and its wasteful and purposeless expenditure of the public money. We have also shewn in what manner we think the existing statute law may be best consolidated.

But while our law reformers are talking instead of acting, and their splendid and reiterated promises of a Victorian code are likely to be only in part performed, by the production at some remote period of a mere index, may not something be done to improve that mass thrown each session in a crude and undigested state before the people, under the name of "the public general statutes of the realm?"—may not something be suggested, and perhaps done, to lessen its bulk and to improve its quality? We will endeavour to make a few suggestions, and no doubt something will be done if, and we fear only if, independent members of Parliament will take up the subject, and force its consideration upon our legal functionaries, or upon the Government to which they belong.

The statutes passed by Parliament are divided into four classes: first, what are termed public general acts; secondly, local acts; thirdly, private acts, printed by the Queen's printer, and whereof the printed copies may be given in evidence; and, lastly, private acts not printed.

It is with reference to the first class—the public general acts—that we wish now to make a few remarks.

First with regard to lessening the bulk of the edition of the public general statutes issued after each session. There is no person, we are sure, whom necessity compels annually to purchase any authorised edition of our statutes, but what must, upon examination of them, feel that a very great part are utterly useless to him, and indeed worse than useless, as they serve only as incumbrances upon the rest, and to render it a more difficult task to get at what is really useful when he has occasion for it. He will find (notwithstanding the title of the volume) many statutes in reality of a merely local or personal, others of a merely temporary or fugitive, character.

To explain our meaning, let us (passing over the broken and disjointed session of 1859) examine the folio edition of the public general acts passed in the 21 & 22 Vict. It consists (without taking into consideration the titles of the local and private acts, and the index) of 249 pages. In the first place, a considerable reduction would be made if, in each session, the acts exclusively relating to Ireland, Scotland, our colonies, or India, were printed separately; but even assuming that such a plan might be deemed unadvisable, might not a very large proportion of the acts be printed in a separate volume, as public acts of a temporary, or local, or personal character?

Amongst the former might be reckoned the Mutiny and Appropriation Acts.

Amongst the latter we reckon inclosure acts, and acts enabling public bodies or individuals either to acquire or deal with property—such, for instance, as “An Act to confirm a Contract for the Sale by the Commissioners of Her Majesty’s Works of certain Lands to the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 21); “An Act for abolishing the Tolls now levied on the Bridge over the Shannon, at Portumna, in Ireland,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 23); “An Act to confer Powers on the Commissioners of Her Majesty’s Works and Public Buildings to acquire the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, and adjacent Property, for the Erection of a new General Post-office, and for other Purposes,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 40); “An Act to give to the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, and the Colleges of those Universities, and to the Colleges of St. Mary of Winchester, near Winchester, and of King Henry the Sixth at Eton, Power to sell, enfranchise, and exchange Lands under certain Conditions; and also to grant Leases for Agricultural, Building, and Mining Purposes, and to deal with the Interests of their Lessees, under proper Reservations and Restrictions,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 44); “An Act for the future Appropriation of the Tithe or Tenth of Lead Ores in the Parishes of Stanhope and Walsingham, in the County of Durham, belonging to the respective Rectors thereof, subject to the existing Incumbencies, and for making other Provisions for the Endowment of the said Rectories in lieu thereof; and for other Purposes connected therewith,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 58); “An Act for enabling the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland to acquire certain Lands and Houses for the Site of a new Court or Courts and other Offices and Buildings required for the Public Service, in extension of the Four Courts in the City of Dublin; and for other Purposes,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 74); “An Act to make Provision for the better Government and Discipline of the Universities of Scotland, and improving and regulating the Course of Study therein, and for the Union of the two Universities and Colleges of Aberdeen,” (21 & 22 Vict. c. 83). Within the same category fall no less than four acts for confirming the schemes of the Charity Commissioners in different localities.

Now, these acts, and others of the same kind, are, no doubt, intensely interesting to the individuals or neighbourhoods specially concerned—viz. the persons desiring to deal, in a manner authorised by act of Parliament, with the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, and certain universities and colleges. The inhabitants in the neighbourhood of the bridge at Portumna will rejoice that they may now cross it without any demand upon their purses; the rectors of Stanhope and Walsingham, in the county of Durham, may be glad to have the question of the lead tithes of their respective parishes settled upon a convenient and equitable footing; and the two universities and colleges of Aberdeen may not regret to see the provisions for their better government and discipline enshrined in the pages of imperial legislation; but why should the general and public law be concealed and embarrassed under the superincumbent mass of what are neither more nor less than local and private enactments? If from the volume of statutes now under consideration (which is rather below the average size) had been excluded acts merely of a local, personal, and temporary character, it would have been reduced by about two-fifths in bulk, and more than three-fifths if the acts relating to Ireland, Scotland, India, and the colonies had been printed separately. If this could be done annually (and we think it might) it would be no small gain to the public and the Profession.

Next, how can the quality of the statutes be improved? In considering this subject, we must remember that some bills are introduced by Government or their officers—others by private members of either House. For those belonging to the former class, being in their inception well drawn, Government are or ought to be responsible; but we fear that they are occasionally the handiwork, not of the most eminent members of the Bar, (who alone ought to be employed upon the task), but of young and inexperienced men, whose fitness or capacity for the task is not so much the reason for their selection, as other considerations, of such a character which often we cannot but see have too much weight with the dispensers of legal patronage. This is much to be regretted; for even if, in order to secure the services of a man of learning and eminence as a draftsman, a considerable sum might be required, to pay him freely and liberally would be found true economy. It would render unnecessary those acts to amend, or partially repeal, acts, which so frequently disfigure our statute law, and inflict much misery upon individuals, by the litigation rendered necessary to affix some meaning upon enactments, which to ordinary, and even sometimes to judicial minds, seem to be almost, if not quite, without any.

With regard to bills introduced by private members of Parliament, these, doubtless, vary more in their composition even than those brought forward by Government; often, doubtless, as in the case of the bills of Lord St. Leonards, they are most useful; in too many cases they are beyond measure crude in conception, and still worse in execution.

In discovering the defects in bills brought forward by private members, and, above all, in watching the effects of proposed amendments in all bills, Government should be assisted by an ample and well-paid staff, who should be considered responsible (not, of course, for the acts as passed) to Parliament and to Government for calling attention to all faults in bills as originally framed, or proposed to be altered by what are ordinarily and by courtesy styled amendments.

We do not see any obstacle in the way of the improvement of future volumes of the public acts, both in diminishing their size and improving their quality. Let this be done, and we may then wait, with such patience as we can afford, for the time when the consolidation of the statute law shall be attempted in earnest, by a man with sufficient energy and ability to carry it out.

In a late article on the subject of Domicil, (5 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 463), after some general and introductory propositions, we proceeded to discuss the late cases. In doing this we cited some decisions bearing on the question of a man having two domiciles; the method of distinguishing where a man’s domicil is, when he has two regular residences; the consequences of death in itinere; and the effect of intention. We resume the thread of our remarks with a case in which an attempt was made to push the doctrine of intention to a great length.

A testator left England, his domicil of origin, and took up his residence at Hamburgh; and the facts shewed that he intended to live there permanently, and he did live and die there. But in a will made during a visit to England he said, that, although he intended to return to Hamburg, he did not mean, by such declaration of intention, to renounce his domicile of origin. It was argued that such domicile was retained, as there was no animus in respect of that at Hamburg; but the Court decided that an expression of intention could not prevail against the intention and facts collected from the acts of the party, if otherwise sufficient to constitute a domicile abroad. (In re Steer, 28 L. J., Ex., 22).

In a still later case, (Lord v. Colvin, 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 351; 28 L. J., Ch., 361), in which the facts referred to in the judgment are so lengthy that it would be impossible to state them in our pages, though they are well worth reading, and comparing with those in Steer's case, the following was the bare outline of the circumstances:—A Scotchman by birth, having property in Scotland, went to India, and remained there for many years. On his return he resided for five years on his property in Scotland, expending money upon such property, and considerably improving it. He then left Scotland in consequence of certain unpleasant domestic events, and went to Paris, where he resided for five years, purchasing expensive furniture, and keeping up an establishment there. During this time he still retained domesticity at his house in Scotland, and constantly gave directions by letter as to the superintendence of his property, and particularly as to the management of his horses and other animals. His furniture was left in Scotland, but ready packed up for immediate removal. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., in delivering his judgment, said, amongst other things—“So far as relates to the factum of residence, there was undoubtedly such a residence in France as would be amply sufficient for the constitution of a French domicile. It remains to consider what was the animus. . . . We have a number of verbal declarations; . . . and I may observe, with regard to verbal declarations, that jurists seem to be of opinion (and I think the cases proceed on that) that verbal declarations are not of so much weight as written declarations, and that neither verbal nor written ones would be so effective as the acts of the parties in determining the question of domicile. . . . As to his acts and conduct, some acts tend one way, some the other. . . . His declarations, oral and verbal, are also inconsistent. . . . In such a state of things, what is the principle which ought to govern the decision of the Court? . . . There is one principle very well established, namely, that lighter evidence is required to warrant the conclusion that a man intends to abandon an acquired domicile, and to renounce his domicile of origin, than is necessary to justify the conclusion that he means to abandon his domicile of origin and acquire a new one. And another principle is that referred to by Lord Cranworth in Whicker v. Hume, namely, that it requires stronger and more conclusive evidence to justify the Court in deciding that a man has acquired a new domicile in a foreign country, than would suffice to warrant the conclusion that he has acquired a new domicile in a country where he is not a foreigner. . . . I think Dr. Cochrane did not abandon his Scotch domicile.”

We now come to those cases which bear on the second class of domiciles mentioned in our opening article, viz. domiciles impressed by law, as in the case of children, wives, ambassadors, officers, &c.

In the case of Wright's Trusts, (25 L. J., Ch., 621), an Englishman, retaining his English domicile, had an illegitimate child; he afterwards became domiciled in France, and there married the mother; and the question to be decided was the legitimacy of the child. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in delivering his judgment, said—“Now, in order to come to a conclusion upon that state of facts, I shall first consider how the Courts in France and Scotland, where similar law prevails, deal with cases of persons who are clearly domiciled subjects of the country before whose tribunals the case comes to be tried. There are certain points clear. . . . The marriage must be celebrated according to the law of the country in which the persons happen to be; but when celebrated, the whole effect is that of the country to which the party belongs by domicile. . . . It has been settled in France, that if a domiciled Frenchman has a child in England, and marries there in English form, nevertheless the law of France prevails, and the child is legitimate. . . . And the House of Lords in Munro v. Munro held, that where a domiciled Scotchman, who had intercourse with an Englishwoman in England, and afterwards married her there, the child was legitimated. . . . So far the law is clear. . . . On the other hand, the converse is equally well settled in all countries, viz. that if a party affected by the law of England, and having an English domicile, were to have that connexion with any woman in France, and afterwards intermarry in France, the law of England would apply with respect to the domicile, and that the child would be illegitimate. . . . I do not think it has ever been found that the circumstances have occurred, which occur in this case, of a person domiciled at the time of the birth of the child in England, and domiciled . . . at the time of the marriage in France.” He then, after shewing that by the French law the question is, whether at the time of connexion there was any impediment to the marriage, and that the fact of an intermediate marriage does not matter, proceeds—“I apprehend, with regard to the English law, the offspring of any unmarried woman can be attributed to no father whatever, except for the purposes of the acts relating to bastardy; . . . and nothing done at any future period by the father can legitimate the child.” He then elaborately reviews Sheddens v. Patrick, (1 Macq. 612; 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 151); Lord Cottenham's (7 Cl. & Fin. 873) and the Lord President's (1 Rob. App. Cas. 551) judgments in Munro v. Munro; Conty's case; and Lord Redesdale's expressions in The Strathmore Peerage case, (4 Wils. & Sh. App. 89); and comes to this decision:—“I think, on every point of principle, the law of domicile fastening in this instance on the child, you are driven into this difficulty—you can only make yourself legitimate by saying you are the child of an Englishman, and you cannot make yourself legitimate in any other way. Then, if you say you are the child of an Englishman, and you are obliged to concede that you were born at a period when that Englishman remained a domiciled Englishman, you concede that you were born before marriage, and that you are illegitimate, and nothing, it appears to me, after that, can establish a legitimate connexion between that Englishman and his child.” And in the conclusion of his judgment he makes some very important observations on the French law, the consequences of a different decision to the one at which he had arrived, and illustrates the necessity of the conflict of laws by the case of a marriage abroad with a deceased wife's sister, thereby forestalling the decision in the late case of Brook v. Brook, (4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 317; 27 L. J., Ch., 401).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 21, 1860.

SOME short time since we undertook the task of collecting those cases on the law of domicile which have been decided within the last ten years. In our first article we gave a general sketch of the law, and of the divisions into which it was generally divided; and then, in that and an ensuing article, we proceeded to take the late cases, according as they bore on the order in which we had stated the general principles. In the latter article we had proceeded as far as the question of domicils impressed by law, and had cited the recent cases which related to minors. We now resume our subject, and continue the same section of it, with the decisions respecting the domicile of a married woman.

Where the wife of a domiciled Englishman lived apart from him, without a legal separation or divorce, it was held that she could not acquire a foreign domicile. (In re Daly's Settlement, 4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 525; 27 L. J., Ch., 751). But although, as a general proposition, a wife cannot acquire a domicile separate and distinct from her husband, yet it seems that where there is a decree for judicial separation, or the husband has established himself permanently in a foreign country, and deserted his wife, or been transported, such a power may exist. (See Dolphin v. Robins, 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1271). And the ordinary presumption, that a wife is legally domiciled where her husband is, fails where there has been a sentence of divorce. (Williams v. Dormer, 2 Robert. 505).

In 1819 a Sardinian came to England, and became attached to the Sardinian embassy. In 1821 he was dismissed, but he continued for ten years to reside in England. He was then for three years chargé d'affaires in London, and for three years minister in Holland. In 1837 he was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to England, and retained that office till his death in 1846. It appeared that he always called London his home, even when temporarily in Turin, and expressed his intention of never leaving England, even if his appointment were cancelled, and of being buried near his daughter in Kensal-green Cemetery. (Heath v. Samson, 14 Beav. 441). It was held that his domicile was English.

Where (Forbes v. Forbes, cited in previous article, and reported in Kay, 341; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 642; 23 L. J., Ch., 724) a minor, having a Scotch domicile, left Scotland in 1787 for India, with an appointment in the East India Company's service, and remained there till he returned on furlough in 1808, it was held that his Scotch domicile had ceased by the acquisition of an Anglo-Indian one; Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., saying that the question did not turn on the simple fact of the party being under an obligation by his commission to serve in India; but where an officer accepted a commission or employment, the duties of which necessarily required residence in India, and there was no stipulated period of service, and he proceeded to India accordingly, the law, from such circumstances, presumed an intention consistent with his duty, and held his residence to be animo et facto in India.

In this case the officer had real estate in Scotland; but, without residence, this fact was considered of no importance. On his return he built a mansion-house on his estate in Scotland, took great interest in its progress, resided near it very frequently during the four years of his furlough, and expressed his hope of returning permanently to Scotland, but returned to his service in India, as he had always intended. These facts were not considered a destruction of his Anglo-Indian domicile.

We now, in conclusion, come to those remaining cases which, although they do not lay down any legal propositions, still illustrate the relative value of different facts in determining a man's domicile.

An English gentleman, (Hoskins v. Mathews, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 196; 25 L. J., Ch., 689), long before his death, took up his abode in a house which he had purchased in a foreign city, set up his establishment there, lived there with such of his children as were not at school or out in the world, and destined that place for their future residence; from thence he went, and habitually returned; he died in the country where he had purchased this house, having made a will in the language of that country, but not effectual for disposing of his property there, and a will in the English form, giving away all his other property, which was personal. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., decided that his domicile was foreign; and Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., on appeal from this decision, held, that where the residence of an Englishman in a foreign country is a matter of necessity upon account of health, change of domicile is not effected; but if the state of his health is such that a residence abroad is adopted as most beneficial, and is the result of choice, a change of domicile will be effected: that he thought the latter was the state of the case before him, and the domicile therefore foreign. From this judgment Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., dissented, and the judgment of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., consequently stood affirmed.

In a case (The Attorney-General v. Fitzgerald, 25 L. J., Ch., 743) decided a few months after the above, but without its being cited, the following facts appeared:—A testator, having an Irish domicile of origin, in 1790 went to India, and entered into a business partnership, which was dissolved in 1800. In 1802 he came to England, took an assignment of a leasehold house in London, and purchased the furniture in the house. In 1811 he sold the house and furniture, and went to reside at Clifton, and remained there till 1812. In that year he went to Madeira for his health; he there made his will; and in 1815 he went to Lisbon by advice, and there died. When he went abroad he had left a trunk of papers in England, and while absent he had expressed an intention to live in Ireland if his life was spared. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., without noticing the distinction taken by Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., said, that as Madeira was a fit place for persons suffering under his disorder, he did not doubt that he only went there to restore his health, and that his domicile was English.

A testator, who was an English-born subject, and an officer in the Royal Navy on half-pay, in 1829 obtained leave of absence for the purpose of going to India, and went to Calcutta, where he established a lucrative business. In 1830 he married, and subsequently had three children born in Calcutta. He continued to receive his half-pay, and to obtain renewals of his leave of absence, until 1839. In that year he made his will, and died at Calcutta, without having at any time returned to England. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., after remarking on the fact of the English law not agreeing with some foreign jurists on the question of ten years' residence, and of the unimportance of the deceased being on half-pay, decided that his domicile was Indian. (Cockrell v. Cockrell, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 727; 25 L. J., Ch., 730).

A testator, whose domicilium originis was Ireland, where he inherited considerable estates, abandoned such domicile, and by a long residence in England acquired an English one. In the year 1836 he sold his house and furniture, and, breaking up his establishment in England, went to reside in France, where he bought and furnished a house, in which he resided permanently (cohabiting with a French woman) till the period of his death in 1849. With the exception of occasional visits of short duration to England for purposes of business relating to his estates in Ireland and his property in the English funds, he never quitted this residence. It was held, under such circumstances, that the testator's domicile was French, and was not affected by his having expressed his intention to return to England in an event which never happened, or of his having on one occasion, when in England, executed a will according to the English form and law, or from the circumstance that the bulk of his property was in the English funds. (Anderson v. Lanenville, 9 Moo. P. C. 325).

A man born in Scotland, of Scotch parents, and educated there, in 1780 went to the East Indies, where he remained, as a surgeon in the East India Company's service, until 1804, when he came to England on leave of absence, but never returned to India, and in 1809 retired from the company's service upon a pension, and on the pay of his rank. For two years after leaving India he resided near London, but he made donations to various institutions in Scotland. At the end of 1806 he went to Edinburgh, and embarked in the business of a banker. He purchased a house there, married, and then caused his mother to return from abroad to Scotland. In 1815 his affairs became embarrassed. In 1817 he came to London, and continued to reside in England till 1828, occupying furnished lodgings. He caused his house and furniture in Edinburgh to be sold, and his books to be sent to London, and occupied himself in the sale of various oriental works, of which he was the author, and in lecturing on Hindostanee and other oriental languages, chiefly under the auspices of the East India Company. Between 1817 and the time of his death he also projected various undertakings, of which he was to be director, and resided in London: he paid three short visits to Scotland, and in 1825 he went to Belgium, and from that time continued to visit the continent. In 1833 he returned to England, but in 1834 he again visited France, and remained for longer periods than at first; and in 1837 he took a lease for a term of years of some premises in Paris, in which he resided, (occasionally visiting England), and in which he died in 1841, having executed a will according to the English law, in which he described himself as of Edinburgh. Upon exceptions to the Master's report, finding that the testator's domicile was in England, it was held, that in 1817 the testator was domiciled in Scotland; that he subsequently became domiciled in England, and was so in 1827; and that it was not changed at the time of his death. (Whicker v. Hume, 13 Beav. 366; 16 Jur., part 1, p. 391; 20 L. J., Ch., 399).

A Scotchman, a surgeon, came to England, and was appointed hospital mate in the Haslar Hospital. He subsequently was appointed an assistant surgeon, and afterwards surgeon on board various ships of the Royal Navy. He was then for several years employed under the Admiralty on board various convict ships, and also upon other medical duties. During this time, he twice, while on half-pay, revisited Scotland, and remained there up to the time of obtaining employment, but he ultimately, while on duty, died at Malta. Although he had removed all his goods and his sister (his only rela-

(ive) from Scotland, it was held that he had not lost his domicile of origin. (Brown v. Smith, 15 Beav. 444; 21 L. J., Ch., 356).

—Again: a testatrix lived with her husband on his estate in Suffolk till his death in 1843: on the sale of that estate, in the same year, she removed, with her plate and furniture, to a place near Wakefield, where a son-in-law had taken a house, and lived there with her son-in-law and daughter till 1844. In that year they all left, the testatrix warehousing her furniture near Wakefield, and leaving her plate at her banker's in London, to whom she gave a power of attorney to receive all money due to her, her property consisting of an annuity out of Barbadoes property, money in the funds, and railway shares. They wintered together abroad, and from that time till her death the testatrix resided abroad at different places, in consequence of rheumatism, but generally passed the summer in England. During her latter years, however, she resided with her son in a house in France, which she had encouraged him to take, and eventually built a house there, (which remained unfurnished at the time of her death), and had some of her furniture removed from England. A great mass of declarations and conversations were given in evidence both in favour of an English and a French domicile. Sir C. Cresswell, after stating the facts at length; stating the law to be that no man could have two domicils for the purposes of succession, and that his forum originis remained till he had acquired another, and manifested and carried into execution an intention of abandoning his former domicile; and finally discussing most elaborately the different portions of the evidence; determined that it was impossible to say that the testatrix, animo et facto, had abandoned her English domicile. (Crookenden v. Fuller, 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1222). It may, perhaps, be worth remarking, before we leave this case, that it therein appeared that, according to the law of France, if a Frenchman were to come to London for a day, and there make his will in English form, his will would be a good one.

PRIVATE ACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—A mistake is annually made by the framers of private acts, which perhaps a notice in your paper will put a stop to.

The clause invariably inserted in such acts, that "a copy of it printed by the Queen's printers may be given in evidence," &c., was always of a most Hibernian character; for it is evident that, in strictness, "judges, justices, and others" could have no more judicial knowledge of that very clause than of any other part of the act, and they were consequently called on to admit the printed copy in evidence on the strength of an enactment with which, by hypothesis, they were bound to be unacquainted. However, it served a purpose once, but now it is no longer needed, for by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3, it is enacted, that "all copies of private and local and personal acts of Parliament, not public acts, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers," shall be admitted as evidence thereof &c. The clause, therefore, is superfluous, and should be omitted. The declaration usually coupled with it, "that this act shall not be a public act," must, however, be retained, being rendered necessary by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 7, which enacts, that every act shall be deemed a public act, "unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such act," which is Hibernian too, for how are judges, justices, and others to know that they are not to know the act, except by taking judicial notice of this clause, which is part of it?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to some remarks in a review of my two Lectures on the Admiralty Court in The Law Times. It is but fair to you to state, that your publication of my two Lectures in extenso was with my entire consent. So far from objecting, I considered your publishing of them a compliment, especially as you had never, I believe, reported anything of the kind before in THE JURIST. It was, too, quite spontaneous. I did not know of it till I saw the report of the first portion. I then offered to and did correct the proof sheets of the second portion.

I was influenced to publish the Lectures in a separate form, not with any notion of profit, (indeed, I would not appropriate any profits there might be), but that my friends might possess a carefully corrected copy of the Lectures, with some additional notes, which I think will be found useful and valuable, but which I could not give before.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,
Old Jewry, Jan. 17, 1860.

J. MORRIS.

Revising.

The Consolidated General Orders of the High Court of Chancery, with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges. (By Authority).

[Stevens & Norton, London.]

THE Profession may now be congratulated upon having before it, what has been so long needed, the Consolidated Orders of the Court of Chancery.

Up to the present time practitioners in the Court of Chancery must be well aware of the difficulties which were continually occurring from the complexity, discrepancy, and confusion of the Orders. Until of late years each Chancellor issued what Orders he thought fit, regardless of, and sometimes apparently in ignorance of, those of his predecessors, as no care was taken as to the preservation of the early Orders, and there was no official or complete collection of them published. The General Orders, however, as collected by Mr. Sanders, and those since published, are very numerous, and extend over a period of nearly 500 years, commencing with the reign of King Richard II. The difficulty of dealing with such a mass of matter, and of reducing it to a shape conformable to modern practice, may perhaps be guessed at, if not properly estimated, when we consider that not only had many of the old Orders been expressly repealed, but others had only been virtually repealed or superseded—some by statutes, others by subsequent Orders, others by a train of decisions, others by disuse or contrary usage; while in some instances an Order may be found to have been from time to time silently and partially abrogated, leaving some small portion of it still subsisting.

From the first report of the consolidators, Mr. Josiah W. Smith and Mr. H. Cadman Jones, to Lord Chelmsford when Lord Chancellor, it appears that their instructions from his Lordship were, "to consolidate all the Orders contained in the collection of Orders by G. W. Sanders, Esq., published by Maxwell & Son in the year 1845, which relate to general practice, and the Orders of the Court subsequent thereto relating to general practice; so that all such Orders as have become superseded, or have become obsolete as Orders, though they may have been the foundation of existing practice, and all such Orders as are expressly or virtually abrogated by other Orders, or by statutes, or by decisions which appear to have established a practice more expedient than that which the Orders repugnant to them enjoin, be omitted; and so that the remainder, except where their style is very antiquated, be not further altered in language than shall be deemed necessary for the purpose of consolidating the same, and of adapting them to the present practice, so as to form a harmonious and well-arranged collection, and for the purpose of determining the most expedient practice where there is a conflict of authority on the words of an Order."

* Reports of the first two of Mr. Peachey's Lectures on Settlements will be found in our second volume, New Series, part 2, pp. 477, 503, 516.—Ed.

These instructions have been admirably followed by the consolidators, who deserve the highest credit for the zeal, industry, and accuracy which they have brought to bear upon their important task.

The value of the work has also been enhanced by its having been perused by the officers of the court and by the judges; and the present Lord Chancellor (Lord Campbell) has shewn a most laudable desire that the work commenced and (subject to the approval of the judges) carried out by Lord Chelmsford should be brought to a happy conclusion.

The consolidators have not contented themselves with a consolidation of the Orders, for they have accompanied them with all means and appliances whereby the practitioner at once, and without the slightest trouble, may find out whatever point of procedure he may be in search of.

First, then, they give us a table of the Consolidated Orders; secondly, a table of the Consolidated Orders, with the marginal notes to their constituent rules; thirdly, a table of schedules to the Consolidated Orders; fourthly, a table of the subjoined regulations, with the marginal notes to their constituent rules, and the schedules thereto; fifthly, a chronological list of abrogated Orders incorporated in the Consolidated General Orders; sixthly, a chronological list of abrogated Orders incorporated in the subjoined regulations. These are followed by the Consolidated Orders, the schedules, the regulations as to special examiners' fees and charges, solicitors' fees and charges, court fees and charges for copies, an appendix of certain Orders excepted from abrogation; and last, though not of the least importance, an elaborate index of forty-six pages.

The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arose under the old Orders.

It will be seen that claims are abolished, upon the ground, that although they were very useful at the time they were introduced, yet, in consequence of the change of practice in other respects, (such as the dispensing with answers in so many cases, and the proceeding by way of motion for a decree), it is no longer necessary or desirable to resort to the proceeding by claim.

Some of the rules in the Consolidated Orders introduce a new practice, and to them the attention of the Profession should be at once directed. They will be easily found; for to most, if not to all, of them, an asterisk is prefixed.

The greatest credit is due to Lord Chelmsford for originating, and to the present Lord Chancellor for so zealously furthering, so useful an undertaking.

The thanks of the Profession are, we think, specially due to the consolidators, Mr. Josiah W. Smith and Mr. H. Cadman Jones, who, by separating those Orders which were subsisting from a mass of others which had become defunct, have contrived to bring order out of confusion, and harmony out of discord, and have conferred both upon practitioners and suitors a great and unmixed benefit.

The Law relating to the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, the Duties of the Registration Officers, and the Marriage of Dissenters in England; with Notes and Cases. By W. C. GLEN, Barrister-at-Law, and of the Poor-law Board. [Knight & Co., 1860.]

THE title of this little book sufficiently explains its scope and object. A collection of statutes upon a subject of so much practical importance cannot fail to be useful; they are published in a convenient and portable form, with references to decisions upon their enactments, and with a very full index.

Two Lectures on the Jurisdiction and Practice of the High Court of Admiralty of England, delivered before the Incorporated Law Society on the 14th and 21st December, 1859. By JOHN MORRIS, Esq., a Member of the Society. [Stevens & Norton.]

WE have already shewn our appreciation of these excellent Lectures by publishing them in our columns shortly after they had been delivered, and we now with pleasure revert to them in their new and convenient form of a pamphlet, with reference to authorities which were not cited during their oral delivery. Among the reasons given in the preface for the publication of the Lectures is a desire on the part of the author that his suggestions for the extension of the Admiralty jurisdiction, to include all maritime matters, should receive the consideration of persons interested in shipping, and a hope that he may stimulate other solicitors to give the Profession, and especially the younger branches of it, the results and benefits of their experience. We are surprised to learn that this is the first occasion upon which lectures have been delivered before the Law Institution by any of their own members; but an example so well and successfully given will surely be followed by gentlemen to whom is confided the education of one branch of the legal Profession, and who are fully competent to impart sound advice and instruction. We should not omit to mention, that these Lectures were delivered by Mr. Morris gratuitously.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS IN FRANCE— RIGHT OF REPUBLICATION AFTER AVER- TISSEMENT.

CERTAIN points on the right of petition to the Senate have been raised by M. d'Haussonville, and submitted for the opinion of the most eminent jurists of the French Bar. The object is to obtain the abolition of the decree of February, 1852, which imposes so great a restraint on the liberty of the press. An elaborate report on the four questions suggested by M. d'Haussonville has been drawn up. It is signed by M. Plouque, bâtonnier, and MM. Berryer, Marie, Dufaure, Lionville, and Bethmont, who have all filled in turn the office of bâtonnier to the order of advocates.

The first question is—"Has a French citizen, enjoying his political rights, the right to demand of the Senate, by way of petition, changes which he may judge useful in the existing laws; and might not great freedom be accorded to the exercise of this right?"

The answer to this question is decidedly affirmative. The jurists who sign the paper sum up their reasons with this paragraph:—

"Rationally, legally, sincerely interpreted, the right of petition, the right of sovereignty, in its origin, in its objects, and in its results, has not, and cannot have, any other limit than the limits we have given it. It may even be applied to every existing law which menaces, endangers, or violates any one of the great interests which the Constitution confirms, recognises, and guarantees, as it may raise and utilise the ideas of reform which the occasion points out and advises. Such is the right of petition, or the right does not exist at all."

The second point is this—"When addressing the Senate, has every Frenchman, in the enjoyment of his political rights, the right to explain the motives for the reform which he demands?"

The answer to this is also in the affirmative.

Third question—"Can the decree of the 17th February, 1852, in all its provisions, or in some of them, be denounced to the Senate, by petition, as contrary to the principles admitted, maintained, and guaranteed by the Constitution of 1852?"

The report says—

"As a matter of form, the decree of the 17th February, 1852, although it has seven years' existence, may be submitted, we believe, to the examination and opinion of the Senate. But is there any foundation for submitting it to such an appreciation? This is more a question of politics than of law; we must consequently approach it with reserve. To discuss the decree of 1852 in its spirit will be essentially the work of the petitioner, and we believe he has a right to do so; and we might stop there. Nevertheless, in order not to leave the special question which is proposed to us without an answer, as to the bearing of this decree, we think it our duty to present some brief observations—first, as to its relations with the Constitution; and next, and more particularly, upon one of its principal provisions. Is it in harmony with the Constitution of 1852? In order that such harmony should exist, it would be necessary that it should not be in opposition to 'those great principles of 1789 which are the basis of the public right of the French people.' (Art. 1). The liberty of the press is one of the most important of these principles. Now, is it respected by the decree of 1852? We have, it is true, read this phrase in a proclamation of 1852—"Our actual society is nothing else than France regenerated by the revolution of 1789, and organised by the Emperor Napoleon I." But the object of that proclamation apparently was not to weaken the solemn declaration we have already quoted, and which covers with its power the entire Constitution. The sovereignty of the people dictated that declaration—the sovereignty of the people maintains it. In a second point of view, the decree of 1852 appears to us to deserve to be criticised, or rather denounced, to use the very expression of the Constitution of 1852. According to the terms of this decree, a newspaper may be suppressed after certain convictions pronounced, and even administratively without a conviction. Now, a newspaper is not only the organ of an opinion, it is a commercial property of considerable consequence, and of which the capital, divided into shares, belongs to proprietors who do not occupy themselves with the ideas expressed in it. The suppression of a newspaper is consequently, in fact, the suppression of a material property: it is a species of confiscation. It is, moreover, a maxim of law in France, that property is sacred, and that nothing but a judicial sentence can interfere with it—all other authority is powerless to touch it. The Constitution of 1852 has not, we believe, authorised such a prosecution. We conclude by referring to a provision of the Constitution, which applies as well (as we have demonstrated) to laws enacted as those to be enacted:—"The Senate opposes the promulgation of laws which infringe the inviolability of property."

The fourth question—viz. "Can an article which, when published in a newspaper or in a review, has been the object of an avertissement, be republished in a pamphlet?"—is also answered affirmatively; as well as the other point, whether an agreement, entered into for the purpose of publication, possesses legal force, and can its execution be enforced by law?

An elaborate argument demonstrates that the decree of 1852 is applicable, and was meant to be applicable, only to newspapers and periodicals, and not to pamphlets. The pamphlet, properly so called, is still under the régime of the general law.

The preventive avertissement is quite exceptional; the general law takes no cognisance of it; it is merely a simple administrative measure, and not a penalty—a warning, but not a punishment in due course of law. The report concludes—

"The production, under the application of an avertissement, remains harmless, as it was before the avertissement. In the pages of a periodical it may again be averti, if it be again produced; but in any other form, it can only be proceeded against by the ordinary law.

"So much being said, we believe we have demonstrated the right of reproduction; and if the right of reproduction be beyond the reach of attack, it is clear that the engagements formed for that reproduction have a lawful object, and that the law may be applied to enforce their execution."

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

In 12mo., price 14s. cloth.

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature.—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

* In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed.

* The Supplements of 1854 to 1857 inclusive, with a General Index to the whole, can be had done up in one volume, cloth boards, (uniform with Chitty's Statutes), price 1l. 16s. 6d.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 28, 1860.

SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVEMENTS IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PATENT LAW.

THE following article has been written by Mr. Grove, Q. C., who has kindly allowed us to publish it in our pages. We need scarcely add, that the knowledge and experience of the writer give considerable weight to any observations by him upon the subject of Patent Law:—

That those who, by meritorious inventions, have advanced the manufactures or commerce of a State should be rewarded, and that the State itself would be benefited by the encouragement given, by means of such rewards, to the progress of useful inventions, appears to many an undeniable proposition. This proposition is, however, far from being necessarily true, and the practical difficulties of apportioning the rewards so as duly to compensate the individual, and properly to promote the interests of the State, are far greater than is generally supposed.

By some it is thought that premiums or honours should be directly conferred by the State upon inventors; but the impossibility of fairly estimating contemporaneous merit—the tendency of such rewards to become jobs—the advantage which the man of the world, who has devoted his mind to the study of mankind, has in promoting his self-aggrandisement, as compared with the man of the closet, who has devoted himself to scientific study, offer insuperable barriers to any system of national rewards. Experience has led this and other civilised countries to make the sale of the product of invention constitute the reward of the inventor; and this would seem, à priori, a fair mode of adjustment, for by this means the more useful an invention is to the public the greater is the reward to the inventor. To effect this, either the inventor must keep his invention secret, so as to retain in his own hands a monopoly, or the State must grant and enforce for him a monopoly of his invention. The former is obviously, in the majority of cases, impracticable, as the greater number of inventions are disclosed by the product of invention; the latter has been, therefore, the plan adopted, and, in the earlier period of the history of invention, has undoubtedly met with much success.

In this country the patent law may be said to date from the time when the stat. 21 Jac. 1 declared illegal all other monopolies, which, from their abuse at the hands of the Crown, had become an intolerable grievance, and confined the power of the Crown to the grant of monopoly to "the true and first inventor of any manner of new manufactures within this realm which others at the time shall not use."

It was soon found necessary for the interests of the public to guard from abuse even this restricted monopoly. The ultimate object of the grant being the advantage of the State rather than that of the inventor, it was necessary that when the period of monopoly had expired, the public should be put in full possession of the means of carrying out the invention, or constructing the manufacture according to the principle of the invention. A patentee, by artfully concealing his mode of manufacture, or keeping trade secrets in his own hands at a time when men's minds were not so quick at detecting them as they now would be, might protract his monopoly beyond the period which was assigned as sufficient fairly to remunerate him, and so long as to keep the public from the enjoyment of the invention, which latter object was the consideration moving to the grant. To obviate this, it was made a condition by the Crown that the patentee should deposit or inrol, in a place attainable by the public, a specification or detailed account of the mode of practising his invention, so that his secret should not die with him, and that at the period of the expiration of the monopoly the public should be in full possession of the invention. But a further provision was necessary—the grant of monopoly prohibiting others than the patentee from practising his invention during the prescribed period, it was necessary that the public should know what they were prohibited from using, as otherwise they might infringe the law from ignorance.

In order to provide for these two necessary conditions, it has been the invariable practice ever since the reign of Queen Anne to insert in the letters-patent a condition, that the patentee shall, within a certain fixed time after the grant, inrol, or, latterly, file, in Chancery an instrument in writing, commonly called "a specification," wherein he shall "particularly ascertain and describe the nature of his invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed," the non-compliance with which condition renders the grant of monopoly void.

In many inventions, the description of the process or manufacture fairly shews to the public the nature of the invention, and therefore complies with both requisites of the letters-patent; in others, the description of the process or manufacture, mixing up what is new with what is old—what is part of the invention of the patentee with what has been previously known—does not of itself shew to the public what they are prohibited from using. In such cases it is necessary that the patentee should state in what his invention consists—i. e. what portion of the new manufacture he asserts, and is supposed to have represented to the Crown, to be of his invention. This may be done by a statement that his invention consists of such and such elements, or, as is more commonly done, by claiming, at the end of the specification, such points as he considers new. Thus, in a patent for an improvement, whereby the friction of the axles of wheels may be prevented by the use of rollers round the axis, he would describe a complete axle constructed so as to carry out his invention. But, as much of this would be common to all axles, he would say, "My invention consists, or I claim the application, of rollers to axles or journals of wheels, so as to lessen the friction occasioned by the revolution of the wheel round its axis."

It will be obvious that many nice questions may and must occur in properly specifying an invention; and, on the one hand, a patentee may undeservedly suffer by an unintentional ambiguity or imperfection in his specification, whereby the Courts are led to the opinion that the patent is not properly specified; and, on the other hand, an artful but unscrupulous patentee may so specify as to appear to give candid and full information, but may in reality mislead the public, and thus lead honest men into unintentional infringement; or, by the terms of his claim, include more than he has really invented, and thus gain a monopoly beyond that intended to be granted to him. Hence arises a great source of litigation, which the history of patent cases lays before us, where questions of great intricacy have arisen. Nor, as long as words can be used to conceal as well as to manifest ideas, and as long as language is imperfect, though used with the best intentions, and by the best educated men, can these difficulties be got rid of. Partly to remedy them, the patentee is, by a statute passed in the reign of William IV, enabled, with the permission of the Attorney or Solicitor General, to disclaim or alter any part of the title or specification of his patent, so that he does not thereby extend the exclusive right.

It is foreign to the object of this paper to enter into the consideration of these questions; they will be found well expounded in the able treatises on the patent law written by lawyers and others conversant with the subject. My object is, after a slight sketch of the present state of the patent law, to indicate what I consider fundamental objections to its efficient working in the present state of civilisation, and then to propose certain measures for remedying these defects.

The grant of letters-patent is an act of grace on the part of the Crown; it is ex mero motu; and the law does not recognise any right in the subject to a monopoly. This is a matter important for consideration, as will be found in a subsequent part of this paper. The discretion of the Crown is practically exercised by the Attorney or Solicitor General, to whom the petition of the patentee is referred, and one of whom reports upon it. If the report be in favour of granting it, the patent is generally granted; it may be opposed at subsequent stages of the proceedings; but these, and the formal proceedings, it is not necessary to enter upon here.

The Attorney or Solicitor General exercises a judicial discretion in recommending, or not recommending, the grant of patent: this, however, in course of time, has come to be rarely used, except in case of rival inventors, where the claims of two or more claimants are investigated by separate examination of each, and the report is in favour of the claimant adjudged to have the priority.

The patent was usually granted for fourteen years, but by a late statute the patentee may, at a small expense, take his patent voidable after three years, with an option of keeping it alive at the expiration of three and seven years, on paying further fees, up to the period of fourteen years. At the expiration of this term the monopoly ends, and the use of the invention is open to the public, unless, upon application shewing sufficient grounds of merit in the invention, or want of sufficient remuneration to the patentee or his representatives, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shall recommend to the Crown to extend the period, which they may do for any period not exceeding a second fourteen years, and upon such recommendation a prolongation is granted as of course.

Such is an outline of the state of patent law in this country, the interests involved in which are yearly acquiring increased magnitude, and the litigation occasioned by conflicting rights is yearly occupying a greater portion of the time of our courts of justice.

I now proceed to consider what appear to me to be the defects in the present working of the patent law—defects such that many able men have thought that the country would be benefited by an entire abolition of the patent law; in support of which opinion there is much more to be said than is generally supposed.

It will probably not be disputed that the main object of a patent law is not to benefit the individual patentee so much as to benefit the State; as Sir E. Coke says, "The reason why such a privilege is good in law is, because the inventor bringeth to the commonwealth a new manufacture by his invention, costs, and charges; and therefore it is reason that he should have a privilege for his reward, and the encouragement of others in the like, for a convenient time."

Patent is not given to a discoverer of an abstract scientific principle, but only to him who by his invention gives a new manufacture to the public. Suppose a patent monopoly to be beneficial to the individual patentee, but injurious to the community at large, yielding the former a great reward, but closing the door to improvements in the progress of invention, which would otherwise take place, it is obvious that in such a case it would not be the duty of the Government to grant such patent. In other words, unless the reward to the inventor promote, in the long run, valuable inventions—if the inventive faculty would be even equally exercised without as with such rewards—it would not be the policy or right of the State to grant rewards, or monopoly, which is a form of reward; in promoting the interest of one invention it would oppose the interests of others, and of the larger mass, who profit by invention. Patent law should, therefore, be such, and so administered, as to encourage by reward inventions which the public would not otherwise obtain, or, by its general stimulus to invention, to obtain for the public a greater aggregate amount of invention.

Starting from this principle, which I feel sure will appear incontrovertible to those who have at all considered the subject, let us view the present state of the patent law in its operation on the present state of society.

In an early period, when the patent law first grew into existence, inventive genius was rare; those who devoted themselves to a life of thought and experiment for practical purposes were few and far between; they had time, without the competitive interference of others, to develop and perfect their inventions. The records of invention were few, and it was comparatively easy to ascertain if a given invention were or were not new. Very few cases of contested patents occur in the older law books. The public obtained a distinct and clear benefit from the temporary monopoly granted to the patentee, for few, if any, but he could properly instruct others in the practice of his invention; and if he had not invented and developed it, a period far longer than that limited by the patent would in all probability have elapsed before any one else invented the same thing, or before the progress of events forced it on the public. Now the case is widely different; inventors are so numerous, the progress of physical science has made such vast strides, that it is, at all events with regard to a great number of inventions, a question only of weeks or months when an invention is to be made.

The power-loom, the jacquard, the steam-engine, were great inventions, requiring deep thought and persevering experiment; but a defect in the working of a loom, in the valve of a steam-engine, &c., is now sure to be remedied by the very fact of its existence; and yet the law gives the same monopoly to the man who discovers the most minute improvement of detail as to the man who discovers a great application of a great principle; and provided the former invention be such that it so stands in the way as to be necessary for the trade to adopt it, it stops all further progress upon the subject. If a ball valve is better than a flap valve, simple as is the invention, small as is the application of mind and the labour of experiment to produce and perfect it, still those engaged in the trade must avail themselves of it, or be passed by others, and must pay the patentee his license demands for the full term of the patent.

There is, again, no half protection by patent; the moment an invention is published, the moment a result is known to be accomplished, a hundred ways of accomplishing the same result will be discovered by the mass of active minds around; if the patentee be protected against all these modes, he will have a protection far more than equivalent to his deserts, and moreover his patent will be the means of arresting inventions which, in all human probability, would have taken place long before the term of the expiration of his patent. If, on the other hand, you do not give him this protection, you in many cases give him nothing, for if the same result can be effected by other means, no one will pay him for using his patent. The patent law, as laid down by learned judges, only protects from the effecting of the same result by substantially the same means; but juries are prone to find the means substantially the same when the result effected is the same, and when the same result had not been effected before the plaintiff patentee effected it; and, indeed, without this occasional stretch of the law, small would be the benefit of a patent. When invention was rare, imitation could only be effected by a few known modes of ringing the changes, and these were called mechanical equivalents; but now, given the result as a fact accomplished, a thousand and one other modes are immediately discovered of accomplishing it. How is this dilemma to be got over? How is a patentee to have a protection equivalent to his merit, and yet not so large as not to arrest inventions which are not based on his, and which would have taken place had he never existed? Strictly to fulfil these requisites is, perhaps, impossible, considering the necessary infirmity of human institutions; a possible mode of approximation to it will be suggested in the sequel.

I now proceed to consider some other matters which appear to me to be defects in the working of the patent law.

The subject-matter for which letters-patent may lawfully be granted is any manner of new manufacture; and if there be the slightest novelty, the slightest addition to or subtraction from an existing manufacture, by which the result can be said to be new, that is sufficient to support the patent. The decision of the question, whether a claim is a proper subject for a patent, like all others arising as to the validity of a patent, is now left by the Crown and its advisers to the trial by court and jury, at the suit of the patentee, when the patent is alleged to be infringed; or by writ of scire facias, to repeal the letters-patent, when it is sought to be put an end to by others interested in its abolition. The consequence has been, that there is only, I believe, one case—Brook v. Aston—where a patent has been upset on the ground of the alleged invention not being the subject of a patent, so slight is the degree of invention or change required to support the patent on this head of objection. Now, it seems to me that the Crown has abdicated its functions in this respect, and that the original object of the grant of monopoly, and the proper function of the Crown as protector of the interests of the public, should be judicial, not ministerial, and that patents should not be granted indiscriminately, and left to a conflict of wits of barristers and scientific witnesses at a trial before a judge and jury, having but a limited knowledge of the history and value of the particular invention. I venture to think that the Crown, as trustee for the public, should, by its advisers constituted in that behalf, inquire and adjudicate upon the matter before granting a monopoly, and that such was the original common law of this realm declared, not enacted, by the statute of James. How this is now to be effected I will also endeavour to suggest in the sequel.

Another point on which I am not aware that a patent has ever been avoided is its utility. It is required by law that an invention be useful to the community to render it appropriate for patent; but as it has been ruled that any degree of utility is sufficient, a case can hardly be conceived in which evidence may not be adduced to satisfy a jury that there is some utility in a patent. So that here again the word has practically no meaning, and pleaders have almost given up objecting to a patent on the score of inutility; yet this was not the real object of patent law; it was to reward, not trivial inventions, which might stop the way to greater improvements, but substantial boons to the public—not changes such as any experimentalist makes a score a day in his laboratory, but substantial practical discoveries, developed into an available form.

Another great change has taken place in the progress of events with respect to imported inventions. The statute of James only gives patent to the true and first inventor; but in an early case—Edgebury v. Stephens—the judges, straining the law to meet what they considered substantial justice, decided that an importer must be considered an inventor within the meaning of the statutes; for whether learned by travel or by study they said was the same thing.

In that day, when trade mysteries were kept secret, when travellers incurred risk, and required skill to get at foreign inventions, there might have been some reason for this application of the law. But how different the case at present; an invention in France is sure to reach this country by the next post, or to appear in full in the next number of The Athenæum, Literary Gazette, or Mechanics' Magazine; and the importer, who posts over from the foreign inventor to anticipate these publications and to take out a patent, injures instead of benefits the public—stops instead of promotes the progress of discovery—has no merit of his own, but the demerit of monopolising an invention which he has not made; and yet he now, as then, gets patent for fourteen years. The postman who brings a letter from a foreign patentee as much deserves patent as the correspondent to whom it is directed; and yet, in compliance with the decision in Edgebury v. Stephens, it is to him, and not to the foreign inventor, that patent is given—practically, an entire abrogation both of the letter and spirit of the English common and statute law.

It may be said that in the greater number of cases the English correspondent is a trustee for the foreign inventor, so that the real inventor gets the benefit of the monopoly. If it be good public policy to grant letters-patent to foreigners residing abroad, it would be far better to alter the law, and not to effect this by an evasion of the existing law, which does not sanction such grant. I incline, however, to think the law, in not granting letters-patent to foreigners residing abroad, is a law founded on sound policy; but this is too wide a question to enter upon here. There are few cases now where the importer of an invention has any substantially meritorious claims to reward; where these exist they might be met by the plan I shall presently propose.

Great defects exist in the trial of patent cases, some of which are incident to other forms of litigation, but some are peculiar to patent cases. In the courts of justice of this country the litigant, who has by his counsel the first and last word, has an undoubted advantage over his opponent. This is, to some degree, inevitable: it has been partly remedied by a recent change in the form of procedure, which enables the party whose evidence is the last concluded to sum up; but in patent cases the advantage is greater than in any other class of cases.

A plaintiff patentee has all at stake—an alleged infringer comparatively little: the former, therefore, is frequently provided with an array of counsel and scientific witnesses, which gives him an immense advantage when subjects are discussed unknown to the majority of judges and jurymen. The case is shaped adroitly, and the minds of the jury are generally moulded into the groove laid down by the advocate for the plaintiff, without being at all conscious of it. The cases generally last so long, that, in spite of every desire to do justice, weariness prevents proper attention to the defendant's case, all that is interesting in the scientific questions having been already exhausted; and ultimately the counsel for the plaintiff has a general reply.

Learned judges, whose minds are not influenced by speeches or matters of prejudice, do not generally attribute that weight to an opening and reply which members of the Bar do; but its influence in patent cases may be deduced from the fact, that in proceedings by scire facias to repeal patents the order has been changed; and where, previous to such change, which was made A.D. 1852, the prosecutor, or those who attacked the patent, began—since that time the defendant, or patentee whose patent is attacked, begins. The consequence has been, that whereas, previously to the change of the law, there was, as far as I am aware, only one case in which a patent escaped destruction on trial by scire facias, there is only one case, since the change, where a scire facias has been successful. On the other hand, as against the plaintiff, it not unfrequently happens that a patent for a valuable invention is upset by an unforeseen defect in the specification. I can pretend only to suggest an amelioration of these defects, but not a thoroughly satisfactory solution of the question.

There appears to me no greater mistake than that of supposing that easy and unlimited grant of patent is a benefit to inventors, even assuming that, and not benefit to the community, to be the object of the patent law. Many seem to regard patent as a right claimable by any one who assumes to be an inventor, and think it a species of free trade to let any one have patent who asks for it, forgetting that there is no such right, and that a monopoly is, ex vi termini, and in fact, the most antagonistic to free trade. But does the gratuitous or easy grant of patent to all who ask it benefit inventors? I believe, that if the private history of schemers could be gone into, the number of those ruined by the delusive ignis fatuus of a patent would be found far greater than is at all supposed. Men, with slender study of the history of invention, honestly discover, or fancy they discover, a new application, and, once embarked on a patent speculation, seldom abandon an idea with which their vanity has become deeply identified, until loss of time and money has brought them to their senses, happy, if not too late, to recover a position from which a delusion, more honourable, but not less exciting, than that of the gambler, has led them astray. The records of the number of patents taken out, compared with those which have turned out profitable, will soon satisfy those who wish to examine the subject in detail.

In suggesting a plan which seems to me capable of remedying some, if not all, the above defects, I can only lay claim to partial originality. My idea is, to have a Court for advising the Crown on the grant of letters-patent, for fixing the term for which they should be granted, for trying patent causes, and for examining and reporting on applications for prolonging the monopoly. The idea of a special Court for trying patent causes is not new; it has been frequently discussed, and viewed with favour by many members of the Bar; it has been alluded to by judges from the Bench, and has been not unfavourably regarded by patent agents, attorneys, and others conversant with patent cases. I would, however, give such a Court jurisdiction beyond that of merely trying patent causes; I would transfer to it the functions exercised at present by the Attorney and Solicitor General, with enlarged powers, or rather with the intention that the Court should exercise the powers now vested in the law officers of the Crown, in a more judicial and less ministerial manner. To a Court consisting of one, two, or three judges, as the amount of business may require, I would suggest the referring all applications for letters-patent. These should be advertised, and from the time of advertisement a provisional protection should be granted—i. e. if ultimately letters-patent should be awarded, the patentee should not be prejudiced by the publication necessarily involved in the advertisement of his claims. The claims should be heard upon petition in open court, where any opponent should also be heard, and the merits of the invention thus discussed as far as they could be at such a stage.

The judgment of the Court should be final, in reference to the two questions, of invention being the subject of a patent, and as to its utility. The Court might also have power to reject, upon clear evidence negating the novelty of the invention; but if it recommended patent being granted, the question of novelty should then be open, and subject to be tried either by the Court or a jury, at the option of either of the parties; the Court to have power to grant injunction, inspection, and account. Scire facias prosecutions should be tried by the Court alone, without jury, but only when a previous verdict had been obtained, unreversed by new trial or motion against the patentee.

The Court might have power to settle specifications, as far as regarded defects upon the face of them, and powers of amendment might be given in certain cases; the term for which letters-patent should be granted to be purely discretionary with the Court, subject to renewal on application, and grounds shewn, up to the period for which patents, including the term of prolongation, may now be granted and extended.

The Court would thus have the powers now vested in the law officers of the Crown, in the judges trying patent cases, and hearing arguments on them in banc, and in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. It is needless to observe that such a Court would have ample business to occupy its time. The rapid increase of patent causes, and the necessarily long time they occupy, is notorious, and has frequently formed a subject of complaint from the Bench as unduly delaying other business. If the work were not sufficient fully to occupy such a Court, it might be given jurisdiction in copyright and registration of designs; and even certain actions of nuisance might be intrusted to it. The present Courts of common law and equity might also have power to refer to this Court questions of a scientific character, either for ultimate decision or for trying issues.

The judges of the new Court should, in my opinion, be all chosen from practising barristers of a certain standing; for nothing, in my humble judgment, qualifies a man for testing the truth in judicial investigations so well as practice at the bar. If, however, in this class of cases, it is thought desirable that the Court should have the benefit of scientific experience, one of the judges, or an assessor, might be a non-legal, scientific man. I make the suggestion, however, rather as one which has been advocated by others than as myself recommending it. Either the judge would commonly yield to the opinion of the assessor, or the assessor to the judge, or constant divisions of opinion would ensue.

It would be difficult to choose an assessor who was not interested, either by actual vocation, if this were not prohibited, or by previous association with certain views regarding applied science, which, however honourable and intentionally impartial he might be, would bias his mind*. Nothing, I venture to think, so well qualifies a man for judicial functions as practice at the bar. A man is trained by his practice as an advocate, and commonly as an arbitrator also, to discard all those points which are foreign to the questions on which he has to exercise his judgment; to disregard what are called topics of prejudice; not to commit himself to bad law for the sake of hard cases. He is disciplined by practice before acute and impartial minds; accustomed to have his failures detected and his judgment tested, he is able to estimate precedent at its proper value, as giving fixity and certainty to law, and preventing its being a wide labyrinth of opinion, and yet not to overvalue it; to detect those points of distinction where supposed precedent does not apply; he is accustomed to the construction of acts of Parliament; to put the proper limits to his own discretionary powers; to lose sight of self in the discharge of judicial functions. The large majority of those who have had opportunities of seeing or trying the difference between what is termed a lay arbitration and a legal one will need no argument to convince them of the superiority of the latter, "cuique in sua arte credendum;" and few, if any, professions require such training, moral as well as intellectual, as does that of an advocate or a judge.

Without an assessor a judge would always take care to inform himself, by reading, on any point of science important to his decision on which he felt himself in need of information; or he might have power, as the law officers now have by sect. 8 of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, to call in occasional aid; and this would not commit him, or those whom he might call in, to any such diversity of opinion as would be greatly injurious in the case of a permanent assessor. He would get information, but no undue influence, and he would seek the former where his judgment tells him he could best find it, and only seek it when he required it, and when it was not disclosed, as it generally would be, in the discussion of the case before him.

Perhaps there is no case more instructive on the subject of the qualification for judicial functions afforded by the education of a practising barrister than that of the decisions of revising barristers. On no subject does a one-sided or partial feeling commonly entrap men more readily than that of politics, and yet comparatively young men, of a few years' standing at the Bar, have now for many years been appointed to decide judicially electoral qualifications; and I am not aware of a single instance where a revising barrister has been accused, or even reasonably suspected, of importing his political feelings into his judgment on questions which vitally affect political rights. It would be well that such cases as these—and many might be given—should be more known and appreciated, as some antidote to the clap-trap abuse that is frequently lavished on the Bar as a profession.

In advocating the transference of the duties now performed by the law officers of the Crown to a new tribunal, I know I am touching on delicate ground. Their present jurisdiction in respect to patents forms a very lucrative portion of their official emoluments; but, upon consideration, I cannot but think it desirable. It would transfer from overworked, though highly competent, men, duties which, by no individual default, have to a large extent become formal, where, it seems to me, they should be judicial. No law officer could, proprio motu, effect such a reform in their procedure as to exercise a discretion, which, though originally vested in him, has, by disuse, become obsolete; and if a declaratory act were passed directing such exercise of discretion, the Attorney and Solicitor General could not possibly find time properly to exercise it. It seems far better to vest it in a Court specially adapted to this purpose, and which would exercise the jurisdiction in public, giving the reasons for its decisions, thus calling the attention of all interested in the subject to the matters discussed, and subject to motions for rehearing and to appeal. Official salaries could be given to the law officers to compensate them for the loss they might sustain, and the time they would gain for the performance of their various and onerous duties would be a great advantage to them, the Government, and the public.

* See some good observations on this point in Mr. Carmichael's work on the Law of Patents, 1852; though, as will be seen by the text, I do not agree in all the opinions there expressed.

I will now point out the advantages which appear to me derivable from such a Court as I have above suggested, and which, I think, meet in a great degree the objections I have urged against the present working of the patent law.

In substance, no new powers are sought to be given; the broad principles of the common law remain as before; the Court is only the adviser of the Crown in the exercise of its constitutional right, though doubtless, practically, as now with reference to the law advisers, the Crown would act on the report of such a Court.

By an examination before the public in open court, guarded by the Bar and the Press, a proper scrutiny of the merit of an invention would be attained with comparatively small expense; and, on the one hand, many an imaginative theorist would be saved from ruin and despair; while, on the other, the public would be saved from an inundation of frivolous patents, which hamper, instead of promote, inventive genius, and tease the honest tradesman by the actions threatened without reasonable grounds.

In considering the question of what was the subject of a patent, the Court would not, if it did its duty, take the narrow ground hitherto adopted, and say that every thing was a proper subject for a patent which was new, in the sense of no one having practised it before, and of its having some, though ever so little, utility; it would look to substantial merit, to inventions which promised efficient service to the community, and adjudge accordingly. It might possibly, in rare cases, reject a meritorious invention, but this would be less injurious than the present state of doubt and confusion. By having the power of naming the time for which letters-patent should be granted, the monopoly would bear a proper relation to the merit of the invention. If, for instance, the invention was a new form of lamp, a new lock, a new mode of bookbinding, &c.—i. e. of a class which would be likely to come rapidly into use, but offer no high promise as to its general effect upon the manufacturing interests of the country—the term of protection should, and doubtless would, be of short duration. If, on the other hand, the invention consisted of a newly-applied metallurgic discovery, whereby, for instance, the manufacture of iron or copper was substantially improved, an invention involving great thought, labour, and expense to the patentee, a long term of protection would at once be granted. It is, indeed, the last class of inventions which forms the strongest argument for the retention of any patent law; the smaller inventions are sure to come; as a matter of course, competition will lead to improvement where it costs little risk and outlay; but it may well be that no one would expend a notable portion of his means in developing an invention which is not immediately lucrative, and which can only be rendered remunerative by the grant of a monopoly.

It may be said that the Court would, as the Attorney and Solicitor-General do, grant all demands, or so large a number of them as to make it hardly worth while to have the discretion vested in it. That this would not be the case is, I think, proved by the experience we have of the exercise of a similar discretion by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the gradual tendency of whose decisions has been rather to restrict than to enlarge the number of prolongations granted. It would be the special business of this Patent Court, exercised in public, not a bye function exercised in private by men whose every minute is claimed for other matters. Some obloquy would probably be incurred at first, but this would soon subside if the Court fearlessly did its duty.

In trying patent cases, the Court, by having its entire attention directed to scientific matters, would be able to deal more satisfactorily with scientific witnesses, would detect their fallacies and appreciate their sound evidence, and thus be able to unveil the truth to a jury with more success, be it said with all respect, than judges who have only occasionally to devote their minds to a class of subjects requiring a peculiar apprenticeship fairly to master them. The Court would analyse matters of fact, leaving them to a jury, so as to do away in some degree with the advantage gained by the more skilful advocate. The discretionary power of granting new trials in the hands of such a Court would be of great advantage.

All the interlocutory matters, such as the settling particulars of breaches and notices of objections, would be more fully gone into and more satisfactorily settled by such a Court than they are in the present scramble before a judge at chambers.

In considering imported inventions, the Court would use its discretionary powers with great advantage to the public. Such a case, for instance, as the importation, and application to various manufactures, of gutta percha would deserve a monopoly of some considerable duration. Such a case as the invention of the daguerreotype would not be allowed to be patented, and shut up from Englishmen in the hands of an agent, who received the communication three or four days before it was published and presented to the whole world by the French Government, which gave its inventor a pecuniary reward, on the ground that the invention was incapable of being protected by patent.

Questions of disclaimer and memoranda of alteration would be fully and openly discussed before the Court, and the publicity of these matters would not only have its recognised effect of compelling the Court to give the fullest and most careful attention to the questions on this head brought before it, but would enlighten those sections of the public interested in the patents discussed, as to the real merits of the patentees. These discussions would have the proper effect of giving increased stability to meritorious, and of exposing frivolous, patents.

With regard to scire facias, I should be inclined to recommend that judgment should not be given, except in cases where a verdict and judgment had been obtained against the patentee on an issue going to the validity of the patent, and that then the question of repeal be tried by the Court alone, without jury. Neither the public nor the patentee would, in effect, lose anything by this; for if a patentee could not venture to bring an action for infringement, the public would lose nothing; and if he did, then the validity of the patent would be questioned by the pleas, and, after verdict against it, the question of repeal would be tried by the Court. The patentee would thus have the benefit of the opinion of a jury; and unless that was adverse, his patent could not be repealed. Such trial would be a fairer investigation than prosecutions in scire facias, as hitherto tried, where the jury, not being balanced by the interests of two opposing litigants, has been liable to be swayed, either by popular interests or by sympathy with a patentee, and the verdicts in which cases have been almost proverbially unsatisfactory; while, after a previous trial, a calmer discussion of the validity of the patent could take place before the Court; and the patentee could hardly complain if a jury and a competent Court both pronounced against his patent.

Of course, this assumes that the grounds of repeal are issues of fact, such as novelty, or of mixed law and fact; issues of pure law would be for the Court alone; but these would more rarely occur than at present if a proper discretion were exercised by the Court in the first instance in granting the patent, and in its supervision of the specification.

The jury panel for such a Court as has been suggested would probably be chosen with a view to the nature of the case to be tried, and selected from trades and professions likely to have experience in the matter coming before them. Thus, manufacturers, chemists, engineers, &c. might be selected as the jury of a Patent Court, and be able to bring their professional knowledge to bear upon the facts elicited; while the right of challenge would protect the parties against any direct or indirect interest which individuals so situated might have in the result, or against any peculiar crotchets or prejudices they might be known or supposed to entertain.

It is, I am aware, a grave question whether there should be a jury at all in patent cases; many whose opinions are entitled to the greatest weight think that patent causes would be better decided without such a tribunal. Not without deliberation, I am of a contrary opinion. The defects of jury trial are manifest; the advantages are more latent, and in some degree may be termed collateral, but, in the long run, I think outweigh the objections. The case is somewhat parallel to that of the benefits of despotism and constitutional government: under an exceptionally great man a country would be more prosperous and better governed than by a representative government; but taking the good with the bad, no thinking man—at least no Englishman—would doubt the superiority of the latter. So with a great judge, it might be sometimes better to have no jury, but with average mortals it is not so. Judges with the best intentions get fixed views and opinions; they have to watch the legal bearings of a case, to check advocates, to prepare their application of the law to the facts, to take notes, &c.; and after all it is a single mind brought to bear on conflicting and entangled evidence, and on the demeanour and character of witnesses. With the jury several minds are brought to bear on the evidence; one detects that which may have escaped others; they are not trammelled by the injurious effects of rules or habits, while they have all the benefit of these in the direction of the judge; over-technicality, which Courts are apt to run into, is avoided; each case is obliged to be so unravelled as to be brought home to a common-sense perception, and in this process light is frequently thrown on the point in discussion, which would be left in obscurity if the case were drily argued, as it commonly is, before a judge.

I could say more on this subject, but it has been frequently discussed, and would be here a digression. I think that even in patent cases a jury is a desirable bulwark, and I feel sure that it would prove a more satisfactory one to the public; at all events, it should be optional as to the graver cases, such as the question of novelty, where much conflict of evidence is likely to occur.

With a few exceptions, patent cases are tried either at Westminster or in London. An occasional case is tried on the Northern Circuit, arising in the towns of Liverpool or Manchester. Sometimes, when some impediment causes delay in London, a patent cause is, to save time, transferred to the Home Circuit. The latter case would not arise with a Patent Court constantly sitting, except in vacation time, in London—i. e. sitting during the periods now comprehended by the law terms, and the Sittings at Nisi Prius after term.

In any case where it would be inconvenient to bring causes to London from any of the great manufacturing towns, a special sitting would be held in such towns; or, if the business were found sufficient, a fixed annual assize could be held by the Patent Court in one or two of the larger towns immediately preceding or subsequent to the present assize periods, so as to be more convenient for counsel, attorneys, jurors, and witnesses.

Lastly—and this will be thought by many a great advantage—such a court need add little or nothing to the national expenditure. The accumulated funds arising from patent fees, and the fees arising from patents annually granted, would pay the whole, or a large part, of the expense of such court.

Such is an outline of the plan which I am induced, after many years' experience in the working of patent law, to submit to your readers. From the general opinion in favour of a special court which I have from time to time heard expressed by those conversant with the subject, and from the general dissatisfaction existing with regard to the present system, I have little doubt that the time will come when either a special court will be established, or patent law altogether abolished.

It is to be hoped, though perhaps hardly expected in this case, that the remedy for an unquestionable disease may be more complete when it comes than is generally the case in a country which so loves stare super antiquas vias as England does, forgetting the rest of the sentence, "ut novas inveniamus." Far be it from me to deny the advantages of our slow and cautious mode of effecting reforms: the benefit of resistance to sudden changes is immense, and the most patchwork reform is better than revolution; but the propositions I have made, if carried out, would be rather a revival of the spirit of the ancient patent law, and a return to its original intention, than the creation of new laws.

The novelty is mainly in adapting the forms of procedure to the existing state of society. The idea, which is substantially a greater degree of investigation before granting patent, to save subsequent expense and injury to inventors and the public, is founded upon the old English common law, declared and defined by the statute of James.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The first article in your paper of last Saturday is not marked by your usual candour.

The writer of it first adverts to the "entire failure" of the late Statute-law Commission, and then (by way of contrast) propounds certain suggestions for a more convenient edition of the statutes, and for the improvement of the quality of the statutes themselves. But what will you and your readers think when informed that the whole substance of these suggestions is to be found in the Second Report of the very same commission? Read the Report, and judge for yourself.

I am not the apologist of the Statute-law Commission, nor do I say anything as to the value of the suggestions in question; but I think it right thus to point out that your contributor either has been guilty of a literary piracy of a very heinous kind, or has taken on himself to sit in judgment on a public body without being acquainted with its works.

Lincoln's-inn, Jan. 16, 1860.

M. I. B.

[In advertising to the Statute-law Commission as an "entire failure," we expressed not only our own opinion, but that of a majority of the House of Commons, who passed final sentence upon it as a "public body." Our own suggestions were not taken from the Second Report of the Statute-law Commission; they were not held out to the public as original; and whatever may be asserted to the contrary, there is not a single suggestion of any value in the Second Report of the Statute-law Commission which had not been made long prior to its issue. In saying the Statute-law Commission was an "entire failure," we never intended to criticise it for what it really has done, viz.

issue reports and papers, but for what it has, after the expenditure of 20,000*l.* of the public money, signally failed to do, viz. effect the legislative consolidation of a single subject to be found in the statute book.—Ed.]

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

HILARY TERM, 1860.

At a public examination of the students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on the 7th, 9th, and 10th January, 1860, the Council of Legal Education awarded to—

Hugh Shield, Esq., student of Gray's Inn, a studentship of fifty guineas per annum, to continue for a period of three years.

John Francis Rotton, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn, and John Edwards, Esq., student of Gray's Inn, certificates of honour of the first class.

Francis Joseph Coltman, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; George Parker Bidder, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; Cecil James Monro, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; John Rigby, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; Arthur J. H. Collins, Esq., student of Gray's Inn; Charles Henry Walton, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; Andrew Richard Daubeney, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; William Henry Baillie, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; William Latham, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; and Charles Baron Clarke, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn, certificates that they have satisfactorily passed a public examination.

By order of the Council,

BROUGHAM'S ADVICE TO MACAULAY.

THE following letter, written by Lord Brougham to the father of the late Lord Macaulay, contains valuable suggestions for young men who have selected the Bar for their profession:—

"Newcastle, March 10, 1823.

"MY DEAR FRIEND,—My principal object in writing to you to-day is to offer you some suggestions, in consequence of some conversation I have just had with Lord Grey, who has spoken of your son (at Cambridge) in terms of the greatest praise. He takes his account from his son; but from all I know, and have learnt in other quarters, I doubt not that his judgment is well formed. Now you, of course, destine him for the Bar; and assuming that this, and the public objects incidental to it, are in his views, I would fain impress upon you (and through you upon him) a truth or two which experience has made me aware of, and which I would have given a great deal to have been acquainted with earlier in life from the experience of others.

"First, that the foundation of all excellence is to be laid in early application to general knowledge is clear; that he is already aware of; and equally so it is (of which he may not be so well aware) that professional eminence can only be attained by entering betimes into the lowest drudgery, the most repulsive labours of the Profession; even a year in an attorney's office, as the law is now practised, I should not hold too severe a task, or too high a price to pay, for the benefit it must surely lead to; but at all events the life of a special pleader, I am quite convinced, is the thing before being called to the Bar. A young man, whose mind has once been well imbued with general learning, and has acquired classical propensities, will never sink into a mere drudge. He will always save himself harmless from the dull atmosphere he must live and work in, and the sooner he will emerge from it, and arrive at eminence. But what I wish to inculcate especially, with a view to the great talent for public speaking which your son happily possesses, is, that he should cultivate that talent in the only way in which it can reach the height of the art; and I wish to turn his attention to two points. I speak on this subject with the authority both of experience and observation. I have made it very much my study in theory; have written a great deal upon it which may never see the light, and something which has been published; have meditated much and conversed much on it with famous men; have had some little practical experience in it, but have prepared for much more than I ever tried, by a variety of laborious methods—reading, writing, much translation, composing in foreign languages, &c.; and I have lived in times when there were great orators among us; therefore I reckon my opinion worth listening to, and the rather, because I have the utmost confidence in it myself, and should have saved a world of trouble and much time had I started with a conviction of its truth.

"1. The first point is this—the beginning of the art is to acquire a habit of easy speaking; and in whatever way this can be had, (which individual inclination or accident will generally direct, and may safely be allowed to do so), it must be had. Now, I differ from all other doctors of rhetoric in this—I say, let him first of all learn to speak easily and fluently, as well and as sensibly as he can, no doubt, but at any rate let him learn to speak. This is to eloquence, or good public speaking, what the being able to talk in a child is to correct grammatical speech. It is the requisite foundation, and on it you must build. Moreover, it can only be acquired young; therefore let it be by all means, and at any sacrifice, be gotten hold of forthwith. But in acquiring it every sort of aloof error will also be acquired. It must be got by a habit of easy writing, (which, as Wyndham said, proved hard reading)—by a custom of talking much in company—by speaking in debating societies, with little attention to rule, and more love of saying something at any rate than of saying anything well. I can even suppose that more attention is paid to the matter in such discussions than in the manner of saying it; yet still to say it easily, ad libitum, to be able to say what you choose, and what you have to say, this is the first requisite, to acquire which everything else must for the present be sacrificed.

"2. The next step is the grand one—to convert this style of easy speaking into chaste eloquence. And here there is but one rule. I do earnestly intreat your son to set daily and nightly before him the Greek models. First of all, he may look to the best modern speeches, (as he probably has already); Burke's best compositions, as the 'Thoughts on the Cause of the present Discontents;' speech 'On the American Conciliation,' and 'On the Nabob of Arcot's Debt;' Fox's 'Speech on the Westminster Scrutiny,' (the first part of which he should pore over till he has it by heart); 'On the Russian Armament,' and 'On the War,' 1803, with one or two of Wyndham's best, and very few, or rather none, of Sheridan's. But he must by no means stop here. If he would be a great orator, he must go at once to the fountain head, and be familiar with every one of the great orations of Demosthenes. I take for granted that he knows those of Cicero by heart; they are very beautiful, but not very useful, except, perhaps, the 'Milo, pro Ligario,' and one or two more; but the Greek must positively be the model; and merely reading it, as boys do, to know the language, won't do at all; he must enter into the spirit of each speech, thoroughly know the positions of the parties, follow each turn of the argument, and make the absolutely perfect and most chaste and severe composition familiar to his mind. His taste will improve every time he reads and repeats to himself, (for he should have the fine passages by heart), and he will learn how much may be done by a skilful use of a few words, and a rigorous rejection of all superfluities. In this view I hold a familiar knowledge of Dante to be next to Demosthenes. It is in vain to say that imitations of these models won't do for our times. First, I do not counsel any imitation, but only an imbibing of the same spirit. Secondly, I know from experience that nothing is half so successful in these times (bad though they be) as what has been formed on the Greek models. I use a very poor instance in giving my own experience, but I do assure you that both in courts of law and Parliament, and even to mobs, I have never made so much play (to use a very modern phrase) as when I was almost translating from the Greek. I composed the peroration of my speech for the Queen, in the Lords, after reading and repeating Demosthenes for three or four weeks, and I composed it twenty times over at least, and it certainly succeeded in a very extraordinary degree, and far above any merits of its own. This leads me to remark, that though speaking, with writing beforehand, is very well until the habit of easy speech is acquired, yet after that he can never write too much; this is quite clear. It is laborious, no doubt, and it is more difficult beyond comparison than speaking off-hand; but it is necessary to perfect oratory, and, at any rate, it is necessary to acquire the habit of correct diction. But I go further, and say, even to the end of a man's life he must prepare word for word most of his finer passages. Now, would he be a great orator or no? In other words, would he have almost absolute power of doing good to mankind, in a free country, or no? So he wills this, he must follow these rules.

"Believe me truly yours,
"H. BROUGHAM."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 4, 1860.

WHEN rumours of an European Congress were rife, we need not feel astonished that a small, though wealthy and influential, portion of our community should begin to agitate for a change in our system of international law as regards maritime warfare; we allude more particularly to a letter addressed by the president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce to their representatives in Parliament, and to a memorial presented to the Prime Minister founded upon the allegations and arguments contained in that letter. The object of both is to introduce a change in our maritime law, whereby, in future, the private property of the subjects or citizens of belligerents shall be exempt from seizure by the public-armed vessels of the other belligerents.

A similar proposition was made to the maritime powers by the Government of the United States of America in July, 1858; and it also appears that the Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of the French, the citizens of Bremen, and the Chamber of Commerce at Hamburgh, have given in their adhesion to the proposition of the United States.

That it may be advantageous to those potentates and communities, to the gentlemen constituting the Chamber of Commerce at Manchester, and similar bodies who have adopted the same views, that the proposed alteration should be effected in our international law, we can readily believe. The question, however, for us to consider, before consenting to it, is, whether the present law is just, and, if so, whether it is not beneficial on the whole to the British Empire, not simply whether it is distasteful, or even detrimental, to the interests of a part of its inhabitants.

The present law, by which property of the enemy taken at sea is liable to confiscation as prize, is stigmatised by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce as a code of morality on the ocean strikingly barbarous and unjust. It is said that it "is fraught with evils in time of peace as well as on the outbreak of war;" such as "difficult questions arising between great nations," "extra rates of insurance," "the withholding of credits from intending operators;" and for uncertainties and inconveniences to commerce, it is said, "the consumer pays heavily in the end." Added to this is "the ruin which would befall numbers of the commercial classes on the first outbreak of war," and "the advantage conferred by steam in hostile cruisers over sailing merchant vessels," which would render the loss of merchants more severe than in former times.

The letter then points out the political advantages which may be urged for the proposed change, viz. "that our whole navy would become available for the protection of our shores and colonies."

That England, being both an American and European power, is more likely to be engaged in a maritime war than other powers. From this it is said to follow, that under the present system, especially in distant ports, preference would be given to the vessels of other nations less exposed to become engaged in such contests; while the proposed change, it is said, "would relieve the British mercantile marine from the danger of serious disadvantage in time of peace, as well as from that of utter inactivity in time of war." And, lastly, that "nothing is more likely to alienate our colonies from the mother country than that their ships and floating property should be endangered by a war originating in some European question, about which they might be wholly indifferent."

We trust, however, that our mercantile marine will be so well protected by our navy as not to be "utterly inactive." It was not so during former, nor do we think it likely so to be during future, wars, should they unhappily break out. With regard to our colonies, we think they are more loyal than the letter gives them credit for being.

The letter of the president next proceeds to demolish seriatim the only arguments which are in his opinion to be adduced against the proposed change. The first argument, it is said, is, "that war must be made calamitous in order to expedite its termination, and indispose nations to resort to it on frivolous pretexta." This argument is at once disposed of by the assertion that "it is open to a simple reductio ad absurdum, for, if logically carried out, it would justify the most atrocious practices of savage ages." And referring to an opinion of Lord Palmerston, "that no powerful country was ever vanquished by losses sustained by individuals," the president illustrates that opinion by asking us to remember "that the first Napoleon attained the highest point of his power after the naval forces of France, and with them her foreign maritime commerce, had been destroyed by the battle of Trafalgar."

Now, the reason usually given for allowing the capture of hostile property at sea is, that the resources of the enemy will be thereby crippled, and he will eventually, from his losses, be disabled from carrying on war. We do not see how this argument is open to the reductio ad absurdum, even if that objection fairly applies to the argument put by the president in the mouth of his opponents. His illustration in the case of the first Napoleon is most unfortunate; he surely does not mean to say that Napoleon attained his highest point of power in consequence of the battle of Trafalgar. That would be like the belief that an oft-cited steeples was the cause of the Goodwin Sands. We will presume he meant that Napoleon became great in spite of that celebrated battle. If, however, we look back to history, does it not tell us that the destruction of the combined fleet at Trafalgar—the annihilation, in fact, of the French naval power and her mercantile marine—gave confidence to Europe, then lying prostrate under the military tyranny of Napoleon, and led to those great combinations which destroyed his armies, and placed him at length a solitary prisoner on the rock of St. Helena?

The result of that great contest, and the knowledge that the same means would be again used, has, we have little doubt, "indisposed nations to resort to war on frivolous pretexta," and given us an European peace of forty years' duration.

The second argument said to be used in favour of the present system, "that the prospect of prize money lessens the cost of manning the navy," is met by the assertion, that it is a shortsighted and narrow economy to attempt to keep down the direct expenses of the navy by a system which holds the commerce of this country in uncertainty. And, moreover, as sailors get so small a share of prize money, the distant chance of it has no appreciable effect in inducing them to enter the service. Now, we very much doubt whether the allowance of prize money is not made rather for the purpose of manning the navy expeditiously than cheaply, and if the proportion the sailors get of the prize money is too small, that is an evil which might easily be remedied.

Moreover, we cannot but think, considering how long the right to capture at sea has been recognised by all nations, that the objection which is made so light of—viz. that such a change in international law will not be respected longer than may suit the convenience of either belligerent—has great weight, and cannot be satisfactorily disposed of. Reference is made to past history to shew that European nations have, with rare exceptions, respected the principles of international law, when well defined and established by their unanimous concurrence. Surely the worthy president must have forgotten the Berlin and Milan decrees, in which the principles of international law were systematically and wilfully violated, and which this country was compelled, in a retaliatory spirit, to meet by the well-known Orders in Council of 1807 and 1809. Such a man as the first Napoleon would not, if it opposed his own interests, have shewn more respect to a convention, whereby private property was to be protected from capture at sea, than he did to the law of nations when he issued the Berlin and Milan decrees. And will the mercantile men of Manchester guarantee us against the accession to the supreme authority, in some great military and naval State, of one who, like the first Napoleon, may obtain enormous power, and be equally faithless and vindictive in his mode of using it?

But the gentlemen of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce do not trouble themselves to go back to the history of what, to them perhaps, appears a remote period; they refer to an historical fact to be found in the recent files of their newspapers, and they gravely assert, as an instance of the increasing humanity of the age, "the release by the Emperor of the French of the Austrian merchant ships seized in the late war, in order, as he expressed it, 'to attenuate the evils of war.'"

The motives of the Emperor of the French will, perhaps, be better judged by some history which has yet to be written. We cannot, however, but consider that the desire "to attenuate the evils of war" sounds something like a mere flourish, and the act itself merely shews that, for some reason best known to himself, the Emperor of the French wished to conclude peace as soon as possible, and upon the most amicable terms, with the Emperor of Austria.

It is true that a distinction has been observed (and not, we believe, without good reason, as we shall hereafter attempt to shew) between private property on land and private property at sea: the former is generally exempt from, the latter is liable to, capture. But we may here notice, en passant, that the first Napoleon continually violated the rule relating to the former, by seizing works of art and other property on land. For instance, in 1796 he seized the property of the English merchants at Leghorn, and obtained by the sale 12,000,000 francs for the use of his army.

If, in consequence of any alteration of the present rule relating to capture, our navy were to be neglected, and the naval supremacy of this country transferred to another power, our mercantile men would, we believe, have bitter cause to regret that an over-anxiety for gain, or a dread of pecuniary loss, even though accompanied by philanthropic motives, should have induced them to play the game of England's rivals or enemies, and to deliver us bound into their hands.

The subject raised by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce ought not, we think, to be settled at any Congress until it has first been well discussed in Parliament, where the interests of the whole country either are, or are supposed to be, represented.

REGISTRATION OF LITERARY COPYRIGHT.

THE Stationers Company originated in a voluntary association of the printers and booksellers of London, who, when the press had become formidable, were incorporated by charter of Philip and Mary, (May 4, 1556), with the exclusive right in their members to exercise the art or mystery of printing in England. They passed by-laws, requiring every member who printed a book to enter it on their register before publication, and imposing fines on those who printed books which did not belong to them. By the stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 33, for preventing abuses in printing, every book and pamphlet was required to be entered in the register of the Stationers Company before publication, and also to be licensed by the appointed licenser*. This act, which was modelled on equally arbitrary ordinances of the Commonwealth, and on previous injunctions or orders in council by the Crown, after being several times revived or continued, expired in the reign of William III.

The forfeiture of the pirated copies, and 1*d.* per sheet, imposed by the stat. 8 Ann. c. 19, was not incurred unless the title to the copy was entered in the register book of the Stationers Company before publication, (sect. 2), or, in the case of a university copyright, within two months after knowledge of the bequest or gift on the part of the Vice-Chancellor, or head of the university or college. (15 Geo. 3, c. 53). But under the stat. 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, omitting to register prevented the recovery of the pecuniary penalty (then raised to 3*d.* per sheet) only, and not the forfeiture of the pirated copies. (Sect. 4). And by the stat. 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, s. 5, the entry was made immaterial, so far as regarded the copyright and the penalties for infringement; but for the purpose of giving information of books demandable on behalf of the public libraries, entry within a limited time after publication was made compulsory, under a penalty.

Registry within a limited time is essential to the existence of copyright under the International Copyright Act.

* "All books concerning the common laws of this realm shall be printed by the special allowance of the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, or by their or one or more of their appointments; and all books of history concerning the state of this realm, or other books concerning any affairs of state, shall be licensed by the Principal Secretaries of State for the time being, or one of them, or by their or one of their appointments; and all books to be imprinted concerning heraldry, titles of honour, and arms, or otherwise concerning the office of Earl Marshal, shall be licensed by the Earl Marshal for the time being, or by his appointment; or in case there shall not then be an Earl Marshal, by the three Kings of Arms—Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy, whereof Garter, principal King of Arms, to be one; and all other books to be imprinted or reprinted, whether of divinity, physic, philosophy, or whatsoever other sciences or art, shall be first licensed and allowed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of London, or one of them, or by either of the Chancellors or Vice-Chancellors of either of the universities."

Under the existing law, in cases not within the International Copyright Act, registration of title to copyright is permissive, and not imperative, except as a condition precedent to the right to sue in respect of infringement of literary copyright. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 11, 24). A suit for the infringement of the exclusive right of performance of a dramatic piece may be commenced without previous registration. Nothing is said as to actions for infringement of the right to perform music. But both as to dramatic and musical composition it is provided, (sect. 22), that an assignment of the copyright of a dramatic or musical composition shall not pass the right of performance, unless an entry, expressing the intention to pass that right, is made in the registry. The intention seems to have been, that even an express assignment of the right of representation should be inoperative unless it is registered; but the words are scarcely sufficient to support that construction; and no provision is made for an exclusive license for a district; and there is no provision for enabling a person who registers his title to a work, in part of which only he has copyright, to disclaim the part in which he has no right, as an inventor can in his specification*. (See Chappell v. Sheard, 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 996; 2 Kay & J. 117).

The title must be registered before suing for infringement, but it is not necessary that the entry should have been made before the infringement complained of. The object of this provision has not been discovered.

Entry on the registry at Stationers' Hall is declared to be prima facie evidence of title, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence. (Sect. 11). Persons wilfully making false entries are punishable, and a remedy is given to any person aggrieved by any entry to have it expunged or corrected†. When the author's name is on the title-page, and he is the proprietor, an entry under the statute is superfluous as a matter of evidence; and therefore an entry of proprietorship by some one claim-

* The 11th section provides for the keeping of a book of registry at Stationers' Hall, "wherein may be registered, as hereinafter enacted, the proprietorship in the copyright of books, and assignments thereof, and in dramatic and musical pieces, whether in manuscript or otherwise, and licenses affecting such copyrights." The office of the Stationers Company is required to give certified and stamped copies of entries in the book, which copies are declared to be prima facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright or license as therein expressed, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence. The words "as hereinafter enacted" refer to the 13th section, which is the only one containing any directions respecting the mode of registering; but none of the forms referred to in that section can be applied, without alteration, to a license, or to an assignment of a portion of a proprietor's interest; and there is no express authority to vary the forms. There is no doubt, however, that the forms may be varied so as to give effect to the intention expressed in the 11th and 13th sections, and that an assignment of a share of a copyright, or a license to print, (which is an assignment of a portion of the interest in the copyright), may be registered by an entry containing the necessary variations from the form given in the act. Thus, where the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 2, directed that an appearance should be entered in one of the three forms contained in the schedule, without saying "or to the like effect," and there was no form of appearance by the plaintiff in person for the defendant, it was held that the plaintiff might appear in person for the defendant, making the necessary alteration in the form, because the act contained a general enactment authorising the plaintiff to enter an appearance for the defendant. (Smith v. Wedderburne, 16 M. & W. 104).

The 15th and 17th sections, which require a license to print, and to be in writing, may be satisfied by a license entered under the 13th section. (See the form No. 4).

† See Ex parte Bastow, (14 C. B. 691), where an order was made on the affidavit of title by a former registered proprietor.

ing as assignee must have been contemplated. If a person who has no title procure himself to be registered as proprietor, how is his prima facie title under the registry to be rebutted? It is evidence of his title at the date of the entry. It cannot, therefore, be rebutted by shewing that at some time prior to the entry some other person was entitled, for the prior title may have determined; and in the case supposed there must have been a time when some other person, namely, the author, was entitled. The prima facie case made by the entry can, therefore, be rebutted only by proof of a subsequent alienation by the person registered as proprietor, or by proof that the alleged copyright never existed at all in any person, (as by shewing a prior publication abroad), or that it has determined, or by calling the author, or some one who proves a title under him prior to the registration, to prove that no assignment has been made to the plaintiff. If another person claims to be entitled to the copyright, his remedy is to apply to the court or a judge for an order to expunge the entry, which will be granted, with costs, if the applicant proves his case, the burthen of proof, of course, lying in him. But see Ex parte Davidson, stated below. This provision, and that which makes the wilful procuring of a false entry a misdemeanour, are quite sufficient to prevent any ill use being made of the enactment, which thus in a very efficient and unobjectionable manner relieves the plaintiff from the trouble and expense of proving his proprietorship, in all cases when that fact is not disputed, by some party who is able to give prima facie evidence of an adverse title. The effect of the enactment was discussed at the trial of Boosey v. Purday, but no light was thrown on it, the Chief Baron holding that proof of a first publication abroad was fatal to the existence of any copyright here.

The construction here suggested is encountered by the authority of Davidson v. Bohn, (6 C. B. 456; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 922), which was an action for the infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in certain songs. The plaintiff had registered his title to all of them under the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. The songs had all been composed long before the passing of that act. The plaintiff claimed under assignments from the composers, and it is stated in The Jurist report, that, his title by registration being rebutted by evidence on the part of the defendant, he was driven to prove it by other means; and the original assignments by the authors (long prior to the act of Victoria) having been by parol, except one, (an assignment of songs in Der Freischütz), which was by deed attested by one witness, it was held that the title was not proved, the statute of Anne requiring licenses, and therefore a fortiori assignments of copyright, to be in writing, attested by two witnesses. It is submitted that this decision cannot be supported, unless, which does not appear, there was some distinct evidence on the defendant's part inconsistent with the assumption that the plaintiff had any title at the date of the registry. It was not noticed in the case that the stat. 34 Geo. 3, c. 156, which was passed before the publication of Der Freischütz, does not require a license to be attested. The decision was, therefore, wrong on that ground. (Per Crompton, J., 4 H. L. C. 854).

In Stevens v. Wildy (19 L. J., Ch., 190) the bill, filed by the author and publishers of a work for relief against piracy, stated that the work had been composed and published for the joint benefit of the plaintiffs, who had been duly registered at Stationers' Hall as the proprietors. There was no entry of the author's original title, but an entry in the first instance of the joint ownership of the author and the publishers, made shortly before the filing of the bill, and rather more than a month after the publication by the defendant of the alleged piracy. Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., held that the plaintiffs' title was sufficient, and said that an author might associate with himself, by registry under the act, any person he pleased. It was, perhaps, sufficient for the purposes of the decision to say that the entry was prima facie evidence of title; and, notwithstanding this decision, the better course, in cases where an assignment by deed is not taken, is to follow the order prescribed by the act, of first registering the author's title alone, and then making an entry of the assignment by him.

Where an injunction to restrain the infringement of an alleged copyright had been dissolved, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action, and the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, having passed before the action was commenced, the plaintiff made an entry of title, and then commenced an action, the Court of Exchequer, on an application by the defendant to have the entry expunged on the ground that the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the copyright, said, that though it was a strong case for interference, the point ought to be settled, not on affidavits, but by an issue. But on the plaintiff undertaking not to use the entry as evidence on the trial, the rule was discharged. (Chappell v. Purday, 12 M. & W. 303).

In another case, in which the defendant applied to have the entries of the plaintiff's title to certain music expunged, on affidavit of information and belief that the pieces of music were old, and not composed by the authors in whose names they were registered, the plaintiff having refused to undertake that he would not use the entries as evidence on the trial, the Court of Queen's Bench directed that the action should be stayed until after the trial of an issue as to the existence and the ownership of copyright in the music, in which the entries were not to be set up. (Ex parte Davidson, 2 El. & Bl. 577). But in a subsequent case, (Ex parte Davidson, 18 C. B. 297), on the application of the defendant (in an action directed by the Court of Chancery to be brought to try the title to a musical composition) to have the plaintiff's entry and title expunged, on the ground that it would be prejudicial to the defence, which was, that the work was first published in America, the Court of Common Pleas refused to interfere by expunging or altering the entry without proof that it was erroneous, and disclaimed having the power to act as the Court of Queen's Bench had done in the former case. The entry was only prima facie evidence of title, and might be rebutted at the trial. If expunged, it could not be restored. (See Chappell v. Purday, 12 M. & W. 306).

The case of Chappell v. Purday, and the first case of Ex parte Davidson, seem to attribute more force to the entries than was intended, or perhaps than the words of the statute fairly convey. The entry is made a condition precedent to the commencement of an action or suit, though, as it may be subsequent to the cause of action, the utility of making it is not apparent. Being made, it is prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's title. The object of the statute, therefore, plainly was, in every case of an action by a person claiming copyright, to throw the burthen of disproving the alleged title on the defendant. That object would be defeated in every instance if the defendant could, by assuming the character of a person "aggrieved by the entry," and applying, under the 14th section, upon affidavit, on the trial of an issue, put the plaintiff upon independent proof of his title. The 14th section was intended to apply only in favour of persons who had proved themselves to be aggrieved; and even in proceedings under that section the burthen of proof is, by the 11th section, thrown upon the party applying, and the entry can be expunged only on such evidence as would, in an action by the registered proprietor, prevail against his prima facie title under the registry. To direct an independent issue to try a fact which is already in issue between the parties is superfluous, unless the mode of proof be varied, which was done by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ex parte Davidson, but, as it seems, contrary to the express terms of the statute. G. S.

BOROUGH COURT OF DERBY.

By Orders in Council, bearing date the 23rd ult., and published in The London Gazette of the 24th ult., it is ordered, that within one month after such publication all the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and of the rules made, or to be made, in pursuance of the said two acts, shall extend and apply to the Court of Record of the borough of Derby, called the Borough Court.

And it is further ordered, that all the powers or duties exercisable by the court or a judge, under any of the sections of the said Common-law Procedure Acts, 1852 and 1854, so extended and applied to the said Court of Record, shall, as regards matters and proceedings therein, be exercisable and exercised by the judge of the said court, or any deputy or assistant judge thereof; that all the powers or duties exercisable by a master, under any of the sections of the said acts as aforesaid, shall, as regards matters and proceedings in the said court, be exercisable and exercised by the registrar of the court, or his deputy; and that the powers or duties exercisable by a sheriff, under any of the sections of the said acts as aforesaid, shall, as regards matters and proceedings in the said court, be exercisable and exercised, within the jurisdiction of the said court, by the serjeant-at-mace of the said borough of Derby.

It is also ordered, that within one month after such publication all the provisions of the Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act, 1856, shall extend and apply to the said Court of Record of the borough of Derby; and that the forms given in Schedules (A.) and (B.) to the said act annexed may and shall be so altered as to make the same applicable to the said Court of Record, and the judge and deputy or assistant judge thereof, instead of to her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, and the judges thereof; and that the costs mentioned in the 1st section of the said act shall be fixed by the registrar of the said Court of Record, subject to the approval of the judge thereof; and that the judge of the said court, or any deputy or assistant judge thereof, shall and may, as to the said court, exercise all the powers given by the said act to any judge or judges of the superior courts at Westminster, in or by the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th sections thereof.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

HILARY TERM, 1860.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

John Oddin Howard Taylor, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Taylor & Ling, of Norwich.

Richard John Littlewood, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Collinson, of Doncaster.

John Shoard, LL.B., aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Arundel Rogers, of King's-bench-walk, Temple; and Messrs. Becke & Metcalfe, of Bedford-row, London.

John Batchelor, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Kingsford & Dorman, of Essex-street, London.

Charles William Duncan, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Gray, of York.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Taylor, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Littlewood, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's-inn; to Mr. Shoard, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Batchelor, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Duncan, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

George Henry Chambley, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Simpson Rutter, of Wolverhampton; and Messrs. Loftus & Young, of New-inn, London.

Marmaduke Matthews the younger, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. G. F. Hudson & Co., of Bucklersbury, London.

John Churchill Sikes, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Francis Holcroft, of Sevenoaks; and Messrs. Loftus & Young, of New-inn, London.

James William Grant Wollen, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Kitson, of Torquay; and Messrs. Gregory, Son, & Clark, of Clement's-inn, London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them either to a prize or a certificate of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Charles Thomas Foster, aged thirty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Hunt, of Field-court, Gray's-inn.

Henry Murray, aged thirty-five, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Miller & Horn, of George-yard, Lombard-street, and St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square.

Henry William Parker, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Marshall & Sanderson, of Berwick-upon-Tweed; and Messrs. Woods & Jackson, of Rochdale.

Thomas Ponsford, aged forty-eight, who served his clerkship to Mr. Copleston Lopes Radcliffe, of Plymouth.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 82; of these 69 were passed, and 13 postponed.

By Order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

MARITIME INTERCOURSE IN TIME OF WAR.

THE following is a copy of the memorial of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce to Lord Palmerston:—

"That public attention is daily becoming more and more alive to the inconsistency in the existing rule and practice of international law, as affecting the property of the subjects of belligerent States on land and at sea respectively.

"That throughout the hostile operations which have been carried on in Europe within the last few years, the ships and cargoes of non-combatants have, as in former wars, been held liable to seizure, confiscation, or destruction; while, on the contrary, a strong disposition has been manifested to abstain from inflicting unnecessary injury upon private property on land.

"That your memorialists are of opinion that it is both desirable and politic that the latter course of action, so much more in accordance with the principles of justice and humanity, should, if possible, be extended towards private property on the high seas in time of war; and the assembling of an European Congress would appear to offer a most favourable occasion for the discussion of so important a change in international law.

"That the general adhesion of European nations to the principles of maritime law comprised in the basis laid down at the Congress of 1856, taken together with the surrender by the French of the Austrian merchant vessels captured by them in the late Italian war, lead your memorialists to indulge the hope that the question would be favourably entertained at the approaching Congress.

"That inasmuch as it is universally admitted that no war has been brought to a termination by reason of the amount of injury or loss inflicted upon private persons, but rather from political considerations, or by the decisive superiority of the military or naval power of one of the belligerents, your memorialists would respectfully submit that the proposed change would not be open to the objection of having a tendency to prolong hostilities, but, on the contrary, by mitigating the calamities of war, it would confer a lasting benefit upon mankind at large, and directly promote the interests of civilisation.

"Your memorialists would, therefore earnestly entreat your Lordship to take this most important subject into your early and favourable consideration, and that you will exercise the influence of her Majesty's Government in bringing the same under the notice of foreign nations, either at the approaching Congress, or in such other manner as your Lordship in your wisdom may deem most effectual."

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Robert Galsworthy, Gent., of Ipswich, Suffolk, to be a Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery in England.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 11, 1860.

EASEMENTS by implied grant may arise upon the severance of an heritage by its owner into two or more parts; upon such severance a grant will be implied—first, of all those continuous and apparent easements which have, in fact, been used by the owner during the unity, though they have had no legal existence as easements; and, secondly, of all those easements without which the enjoyment of the severed portions could not be fully had.

The latter are generally termed easements of necessity; the former it is proposed to call "the disposition of the owner of two tenements," as expressing the same as the French legal phrase, "destination du père de famille." By this expression "is understood the disposition or arrangement which the proprietor of several heritages (fonds) has made for their respective use. Sometimes one heritage receives a benefit from another, without being in turn subjected to an inconvenience, which would amount to a species of compensation; sometimes this service is reciprocal: but these differences do not in any way change the nature or effect of this distribution. If afterwards these heritages should become the property of different owners, whether by alienation, or division amongst his heirs, the service which the one derived from the other, and which was simple 'destination du père de famille' as long as the heritages belonged to the same owner, becomes a servitude as soon as they pass into the hands of different proprietors." (Pardessus Traité des Servitudes, s. 228).

Thus writes Mr. Gale in his valuable treatise on the Law of Easements; and, having divided his subject in this manner, he lays down these two propositions—first, that this easement by implied grant, on the severance of property, does not depend on the doctrine of "no one being allowed to derogate from his own grant," but is as effective for, as it is against, the grantor; and, secondly, that by "apparent and continuous" should be understood, not only those apparent signs which must necessarily be seen, but those which may be seen or known by a person ordinarily conversant with the subject. The first of these propositions is most abundantly proved by the cases he cites; and the second has been indorsed by the judges of the Court of Exchequer in a late case. (Pyer v. Carter, 26 L. J., Ex., 258). He then proceeds to discuss the cases which he considers to come under his first division, and the effect of the most important of these we will briefly give.

If a man possesses two closes, A. and B., and a watercourse runs from the former to the latter, and he aliens A., the alienee cannot obstruct the watercourse. (Shury v. Pigott, Poph. 106; Cunham v. Fiske, 2 Cr. & J. 126). Again: if a man erects a house, and builds a conduit to it on another part of his land, and then sells the land, or, vice versa, sells the house and appurtenances, and keeps the land, the conduit remains with the owner of the house, because it is necessary, and quasi appendant; and if a lessee were to do the same, and after the lease the lessor to occupy, the result would be similar, though not so if the lessor conveyed during the lease. (Nicholas v. Chamberlaine, Cro. Jac. 121). And where the owner of two adjoining tenements, or of a house and land, lets the one, and keeps the other, or lets both to different persons, or grants instead of letting, the owners or occupiers of the respective tenements cannot build so as to interfere with existing lights. (Cox v. Mathews, 1 Vent. 237; Swanborough v. Coventry, 9 Bing. 305; Ri- where v. Bowyer, 1 Ry. & M. 24; Coutts v. Graham, Moo. & M. 396). Where a man owned two houses, with a carriage drive common to both, and devised the houses to two different persons, it was considered that there was not such a permanent alteration of the premises as to necessitate the continuance of the common user of the drive. (Phesey v. Vicary, 16 M. & W. 484). But it is not necessary that the houses should be finished, and it is quite sufficient if the space for the window exists in the carcase at the time of severance. (Compton v. Richards, 1 Price, 27). To these cases we may add some recent ones, which would fall under the same head—the case of Richards v. Ross, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 1036; 23 L. J., Ex., 3), which places the right of mutual support between adjoining houses built by one man on the same footing; the case of Pyer v. Carter, (26 L. J., Ex., 288), where, under similar circumstances, a mutual servitude as to drains was upheld; and the case of Glave v. Harding, (27 L. J., Ex., 86), which follows Compton v. Richards.

Mr. Gale then proceeds to his second division, and after premising that a way of necessity is only one species of this class, and citing two cases, which decide, that if a man, in conveying away his land, reserves the mines, he has the liberty of going on the land, making pits, and fixing machinery, (David v. Kingscote, 6 M. & W. 196), and that if a lessor except certain trees, he may enter to shew them to a buyer, (Liford's case, 11 Rep. 52; Davy v. Arkwith, Hob. 234), he cites a series of cases, referring simply to ways of necessity, and their extinction on the cessation of the necessity; to which list we may add the late case of Pinnington v. Galland, (22 L. J., Ex., 348).

Now, notwithstanding our very natural bias in favour of anything written by Mr. Gale on this subject, and notwithstanding our equally natural disinclination to except from anything countenanced by so great an authority, we doubt the necessity of the division he has adopted, or, indeed, that such division rests on any sound basis. It seems to us that all the cases of implied grants arising on the severance of a heritage may be included under the one general proposition, "that, on the severance of an heritage by its owner into two or more parts, a grant and reservation will be implied of all easements apparently necessary to the state or user of the different portions, either existing, or contemplated by the parties at the time of division." The case of the reservation of mines (placed by Mr. Gale in his second division) clearly falls within our proposition, as a right to go on the land and dig &c. was most apparently necessary to the clearly contemplated user of the mines; and similarly as to the reservation of the trees. Again: as to ways of necessity which arise when a man grants or reserves a portion of his land, to which access can only be got by passing over the remainder, here, most assuredly, access to the land is apparently necessary to its state and for its user, both existing and contemplated by the parties. With regard to the cases of natural watercourses, we think they do not fall within our subject at all, as we agree with Whitelocke, C. J., who founded his decision in Shury v. Pigott on the ground of the right being one, not by the consent of parties, but ex jure naturæ. And as to the conduit and the drain cases, the houses could not have been enjoyed in their existing state without the conduit and drain respectively, which were therefore necessary to the existing state of the houses—and, indeed, we may say, necessary to the state and user contemplated by the parties; and even the drain was "apparently" so—"apparent" being used in the sense adopted in Pyer v. Carter. The cases of windows are à fortiori ones; and those in which the houses were not finished, but the spaces left for the windows, most peculiarly adapt themselves to our proposition.

If a line were to be drawn anywhere, we should say that easements of necessity should be confined either to those necessary to any enjoyment, or to the enjoyment in its natural state of the land; which would include the cases of what are called "ways of necessity." But if this line is exceeded, and such cases as the reservation of mines included, it is quite impossible to stop; for although ingenious distinctions may be drawn between such cases and those placed by Mr. Gale under his first division, no really sound ones can be suggested. We submit, however, that no such line is necessary; that there is no valid distinction; and that the general proposition we have laid down includes all the cases, is consonant with them, and is sound.

THE IMPORTATION OF REPRINTS OF ENGLISH BOOKS INTO THE UNITED KINGDOM AND THE COLONIES.

In the infancy of the art of printing, the importation of written and printed books from abroad was encouraged*, but afterwards was placed under regulation, with a view to protect English industry, as well as to prevent the circulation of seditious publications. In the reign of Henry VIII an act was passed† to prohibit the importing of books bound abroad, and the retail selling by aliens of books printed abroad, and to regulate the prices of books. The Licensing Act, 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 33, enacted that all books imported should be examined by learned examiners appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London. (Sect. 5). Another clause prohibited, under penalties, the importation of reprints which any person, by letters-patent, or by force of any entry in the register of the Stationers Company, or of either of the universities, should have the exclusive privilege of printing, (sect. 6); and by another section, for the encouraging of the art of printing, and the prevention of seditious books and pamphlets printed abroad, the importation of books printed in English, whether formerly printed in England or not, was absolutely prohibited on pain of forfeiture. (Sect. 9). The Licensing Act was continued or revived from time to time, but ultimately expired in 1694.

In the statute of Anne, and the subsequent acts relating to copyright, the importation of foreign reprints of copyright works is placed on the same footing as piracy by reprinting in this country. But the existing Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, further authorises the seizure and destruction of pirated copies from abroad by any officer of customs or excise, and imposes a penalty of 10*l.* and double the value of the copies, 6*l.* to be paid to the officer, and the remainder of the penalty to the proprietor of the copyright. (Sect. 17). The direction that the officer shall destroy the copies is inconsistent with the provision in another section, (sect. 23), that unlawfully printed or imported copies shall belong to the owner of the copyright. By the International Copyright Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, the importation into the British dominions of copies of books in which there is copyright under the act, printed or reprinted in any foreign country, except that of the first publication, is prohibited under the regulations contained in the Customs Acts with respect to pirated copies of British works. By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, the importation of such copies of original works of literature or art, or of unauthorised translations, is prohibited under the regulations contained in the general Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 17, with respect to pirated copies of British works; and by the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, persons importing, selling, or exposing to sale or hire, pirated copies, wheresoever printed, are made subject to a special action on the case, as by the Copyright Act is provided with respect to British works. As the prohibition only extends to books included in the customs lists, which are subject to correction, there seems to be no reason in the distinction between pirated copies printed out of the country of first publication and pirated copies printed in that country or in a British colony.

* The stat. 1 Rich. 3, c. 9, against alien handicraftsmen, contained an exception in favour of aliens importing, or writing, or printing books. (Sect. 12).

The stat. 12 Geo. 2, c. 36, prohibited, during a period of seven years, the importation into Great Britain of foreign reprints of books first printed in Great Britain, with exceptions in favour of reprints of books not reprinted here within twenty years, and of collections. The prohibition was revived, and extended to the United Kingdom, and made perpetual, by the Copyright Act, 41 Geo. 3, c. 107. It had nothing to do with copyright, but was founded on the circumstance that the duty on printed books was lower than that on printing paper. It was repeated from time to time by the acts for the regulation of the customs, (e. g. the 6 Geo. 4, c. 107, and the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 62), and was repealed by the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47, which imposed different rates of duty on books imported, according as they were printed before or after the year 1801, or in English or foreign languages. These duties were repealed as to books printed before the year 1801, and reduced as to other books, by the stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 64; and now, by the stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 97, the duty on books printed after the year 1801 is 1*l.* 10*s.* per cwt., unless imported from any country with which we have international copyright, or from any British possession, and then it is 1*s.*

The first prohibition (as a customs regulation) of the importation of unauthorised reprints of works subject to British copyright occurs in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47, and was confined to books of which notice in writing, stating the time at which the copyright would expire, should be given to the Commissioners of Customs, who were required to make out printed lists of the books so notified, to be publicly exposed at the several ports of the United Kingdom. This provision was confined to the United Kingdom; but the general prohibition contained in the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, extends to the colonies, and is still unrepealed, except with respect to colonies brought under the provisions of stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95, (to be presently noticed), by Order in Council. The general prohibition in the Copyright Act is not taken notice of by the officers of the customs.

The stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47, was repealed by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 84, and the prohibition was re-enacted (as to the United Kingdom) by cap. 86 of the same session, with an additional and inexplicable general prohibition of "paper printed on in the English language." (Sect. 63). By cap. 93 of the same session, sect. 9, (a customs act), the prohibition was extended to the colonies.

By stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95, it is enacted, that if the legislature in any British possession shall, by any act or ordinance, make such provision as her Majesty shall deem "sufficient for the purpose of securing to British authors reasonable protection within such possession," her Majesty may, by Order in Council, suspend the prohibition contained in the acts 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 93, or any other acts against the importing &c. of foreign reprints of British copyright works, so long as such act or ordinance continues in force.

The Customs Acts were again repealed, and their provisions consolidated, in the session of the 16 & 17 Vict.; and by cap. 107 the prohibition of the importation of copyright books notified to the Commissioners of Customs was re-enacted, both as to the United Kingdom (sects. 44, 46) and as to the colonies, (sect. 160), but subject to the provisions of stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95.

An act of the next session, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96, s. 40, requires the notices to the commissioners of copyright books to be verified by declaration, (sect. 40), and gives a remedy to persons aggrieved by wrongful entries in the lists.

We do not know by what influence, or for what purpose, the stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95, enabling the Queen in Council to limit the rights of British authors in the colonies, was passed, and we cannot imagine any pretence or excuse for it. If it is right that literary property should be protected here, it is right that it should be protected in the colonies. The act, and the ordinances and orders which have been passed under its provisions, place British authors in a worse position, with respect to the colonies, than they are in with respect to France and the other countries with which treaties have been made under the International Copyright Acts; in a worse position than authors in those countries are in with respect to the United Kingdom, or even with respect to the very colonies so privileged by Order in Council, for the stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 95, only extends to British authors; and in a worse position than colonial authors are in with respect to the United Kingdom. The law required no alteration; absolute prohibition of piracy is the only effectual protection against it, and anything short of that is less than authors are entitled to.

If the enactment has any operation at all, it must operate to admit foreign or unauthorised reprints of copyright works, and it is not easy to see how that can be done consistently with the rights of the authors. The measure is injurious to the interests of the colonies as well as of British authors. It is confined to foreign reprints, and does not authorise the reprinting of copyright works within the favoured colony, or within any other colony. If it operates at all, it must therefore operate to give a monopoly within the colony to foreign paper makers, printers, and publishers—to discourage native industry and enterprise at the expense of British authors.

The act was first brought into operation, with respect to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, by an Order in Council, dated the 11th August, 1848, approving of a provision made by the colonial legislatures for levying an ad valorem duty of 20*l.* per cent. on the bonâ fide price of the publication, on the importation of foreign reprints of books first published in Great Britain and Ireland, and protected by the law of copyright—such duty to be transmitted through her Majesty's Government for the benefit of the author, and such reprints which are unlawfully imported to be seized and sold, and half the proceeds, together with a portion of the penalty paid by the offender, to be remitted for the benefit of the author. Other Orders in Council, approving of similar provisions, made in Prince Edward's Island, Barbadoes, Bermuda, the Bahamas, St. Christopher, Antigua, St. Lucia, Canada, British Guiana, St. Vincent, the Mauritius, Grenada, Jamaica, the Cape of Good Hope, Nevis, and Natal, were subsequently made, the duties varying from 15*l.* to 20*l.* per cent., and the remittance in some cases being subject to a deduction for expenses of collection. The benefit of the act was extended to Canada by an Order in Council, dated the 12th December, 1850, approving of an act of the colonial legislature passed in the same year, (No. 780), authorising the Governor in Council to impose an ad valorem duty, not exceeding 20*l.* per cent., upon books imported into the province, (wherever the copyright shall be subsisting), first composed, written, or printed in the United Kingdom, and printed or reprinted in any other country, with regard to which the notice to the Commissioners of Customs, required by any act of the Imperial Parliament in force in that behalf, shall have been given, and from time to time to alter the said duty, not exceeding in any case the rate aforesaid, (a reduction has, we understand, been actually made, and the present duty is 15*l.* per cent.), and from time to time to establish such regulations and conditions as may be consistent with any act of Parliament of the United Kingdom then in force, and as he may deem requisite and equitable with regard to the admission of such books, and to the distribution of the proceeds of such duty to or among the party or parties beneficially interested in the copyright.

The duty, not exceeding 20l. per cent., is imposed on the import wholesale price of the foreign reprints, and is to be collected for the benefit of the owner of the copyright, and is the only compensation he can receive for the loss of his property. The current retail price of Macaulay's History of England, in Canada, is 6d. per volume, the import price probably 4d., which, on an importation of 5000 copies, would give to the owner of the copyright, at the maximum duty of 20l. per cent., the magnificent remuneration of 16l. 13s. 4d., from which his own and the official expenses are to be deducted.

The "benefit" of this disgraceful act has been taken also by the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland, and by Prince Edward's Island, by British Guiana, and by the islands of Barbadoes, Bermuda, the Bahamas, St. Kitts, Antigua, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Jamaica, Grenada, Nevis, the Mauritius, and the Cape of Good Hope. G. S.

COPYRIGHT IN DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES.

THE right of the composer of a play to prevent others from performing it must be distinguished from the exclusive right to make and sell copies of the play, which rests on the same footing as copyright in any other literary work. The Court of Chancery has recognised the right of exclusive performance in the assignee of the manuscript of a play which had been represented, but not otherwise published. (Morris v. Kelly, 1 J. & W. 481). Soon after this decision, Mr. Murray, as owner of the copyright of Lord Byron's Marino Faliero, applied for an injunction to restrain the unauthorised performance of the tragedy in an altered and abridged form; and upon a case sent from Chancery, the Court of Queen's Bench certified that Mr. Murray had no right of action against the manager; but the ground of that opinion does not appear. (Murray v. Elliston, 5 B. & Al. 687).

The stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, (which, as modified by the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, is still in force), gave to the author of a dramatic work not printed and published, or his assigns, the sole right of representation at any place of dramatic entertainment within the British dominions, and without limit as to time—that is, as it seems, in perpetuity, or until after publication; and to the author of a dramatic work, or his assigns, after publication, the sole right of representation during the term of literary copyright; and it provided, that for every unauthorised representation the offender should be liable to pay to the proprietor not less than 40s., or the full amount of the benefit arising from the representation, or the injury or loss sustained by the plaintiff therefrom, whichever should be greater, with double costs of suit; but that an action should not be brought after a year from the offence.

The benefit given by the act to authors and their assigns, in respect of dramatic works published before the passing of the act, was limited to works published within ten years before the passing of the act; and it was held that the assignee of a play, assigned and published within the ten years before the passing of the act, was entitled to the sole right of representation, as well as to the literary copyright; (Cumberland v. Planché, 1 Ad. & El. 580); and it seems to have been considered that an assignment of the copyright, in general terms, after the passing of the act, would include the right of representation.

But in order to protect managers from the claims of unknown assignees, it has been enacted by the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22, that no assignment of copyright in a dramatic piece, or musical composition, shall pass the right of representation, unless the assignment is registered at Stationers' Hall, and expresses the intention to pass that right.

The statute of Will. 4 has been liberally construed to extend to prohibit the piratical representation of a portion of a dramatic work. The written part of a pantomime is within the protection of the act. (Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871).

It is for the jury to determine whether there has been a representation of a dramatic piece within the act; and the jury having found that the singing of two or three songs in Weber's opera of Oberon, in the words contained in the plaintiff's version of that opera, was a representation of part of it within the statute, and having given the lowest damages, (40s.), the Court refused to disturb the verdict. (Planché v. Braham, 8 Car. & P. 68; 5 Scott, 242; see De Pinna v. Polhill, 8 Car. & P. 78).

The provisions of this act have been extended to musical compositions by the general Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20, which makes the terms of protection co-extensive with that of literary copyright, but seems to have cut down the unlimited right, in works not printed and published, to the like term from the first public performance, for it provides "that the first public representation or performance of any dramatic piece or musical composition shall be deemed equivalent, in the construction of this act, to the first publication of any book." This proviso will probably be limited in construction to the subject-matter of the section in which it occurs—that is to say, the exclusive right of representation.

The literary copyright must still date from the first publication by offering copies for sale*; and if publication precedes public performance, the term in the right of representation must date from the first publication, as under the statute of William.

In an action for performing a musical composition, of which the plaintiff was the composer, it was objected that the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20, extended only to musical compositions of a dramatic character; but the Court, holding that the piece in question was dramatic, gave no opinion on the objection, which seems to be untenable. (Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 723).

The act of the 5 & 6 Vict. speaks of representation or performance simply—not public representation, or representation at a place of dramatic entertainment. (See Russell v. Smith, 15 Sim. 181). But this is not material. If a drama be represented, the place of representation becomes for the time being a place of dramatic entertainment. Thus, the street in which Punch is performed is, during the performance, such a place. (Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 236).

The act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 22, provides that no assignment of the copyright of a dramatic piece or musical composition shall pass the right of performance unless an entry be made in the registry of such assignment, expressing the intention that the right should pass. This is not inconsistent with the proviso at the end of the 24th section, that the requisition in that section, of registration as a condition precedent to suing for infringement, shall not prejudice the remedies of the proprietor of the sole liberty of representing any dramatic piece, although no entry be made in the registry. The result is, that the author or composer himself, or his personal representative, may sue without registering; (Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 237); but as an assignment of the right of representation can only be made on the register, an assignee must necessarily have registered before he can sue. The clause, however, is imperfectly expressed, for it does not in terms extend to an assignment by writing of the right of representation alone.

In cases not within the 18th section of the Literary Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the mere employment for reward of a person to prepare a work does not necessarily imply a contract that the copyright shall belong to the employer. Where a writer was employed by a theatrical manager, at a weekly salary, to visit Paris, and adapt French plays to the English stage, under an unwritten agreement that the manager should have the sole right of representation in London, the adapter retaining the right as to the provinces, it was held that the employer had no legal title, under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, to sue a stranger for an unauthorised representation in London. (Shepherd v. Conquest, 17 C. B. 427). The Court considered, that as the adapter was unquestionably the author, an assignment in writing was necessary to pass the copyright from him. But where the manager of a theatre, by an unwritten contract, engaged a musical composer to compose music as part of the representation of one of Shakspeare's plays which the manager adapted to the stage, with scenery, dresses, and other accompaniments, according to a general design formed by the manager, on the terms that in consideration of the reward paid by the manager to the composer the music should become part of the piece, and the manager should have the sole right of performing the music as part of the piece, it was held, that, as between the parties, the manager had the sole right of performance, without assignment or covenant in writing from the composer. (Hatton v. Kean, 29 L. J., C. P., 20). The decision was based on the ground that the manager was the author and designer of an entire dramatic composition, and the music was composed as a part of, and merely accessory to, the main piece, and so became the property of the manager. This doctrine, however, is not entirely satisfactory.

ON PATENT LAW REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR.—The article in THE JURIST of the 28th ult., from the pen of Mr. Grove, Q. C., on improvements in the administration of the patent laws, will be read with much interest by many who have written and laboured in support of similar views.

The impolicy, not to say injustice and absurdity, of granting patents, as of course, to any applicant for any invention, has been often insisted on. The supposed analogy from the principle of free trade, whether in favour of such unrestricted grants, or against all such grants, is fallacious. The grant of letters-patent is the grant of a right of action—a power which may be exercised in the most arbitrary manner, and for the most illegitimate purposes. The indiscriminate creation of such rights, at the option of the applicant, appears as little consistent with natural justice as the absolute refusal of such rights, and the denial of property, in the products of intellectual labour. It must also be borne in mind that an invention, in its maturing, in its introduction to the public, and in securing its adoption, is a work of education, requiring the fostering care of the inventor, the capitalist, and the caterer to public taste. It has been well said, a Boulton was as essential as a Watt to the introduction of the steam-engine. The inventor requires protection against his own ignorance—against the fruitless expenditure of time or money on attempts repeatedly made and abandoned. Hence the promoters of the patent-law reform of 1851, and the bills of that and the succeeding session as passed by the House of Lords, made some preliminary inquiry imperative. The Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852, is framed on this assumption; but the whole was rendered nugatory by an alteration silently introduced in the committee of the House of Commons, leaving such inquiry to the option of the law officer. The commissioners have made no attempt in this respect to carry out the spirit of the statute, and many of the evils of the old system continue, aggravated, indeed, by the increased number of patents.

The Commissioners of Patents and the law officers have the power, without further legislation, of applying a remedy for this aggravated evil.

The trial of patent rights is a vexed question. On disputed questions of fact, involving conflict of testimony as to acts done, a jury may be a useful auxiliary in the investigation of truth; but can anything be more unsatisfactory than the process of instructing the Court through a jury of twelve persons, in a great measure ignorant of the subject on which they are to adjudicate? Let the judge, assisted by two or four properly qualified assessors, selected by the parties, or by lot, from a list, approved by the commissioners, of persons conversant with the subject, but not engaged in private professional business connected with patents or inventions, exercise the present functions of the judge and jury. Thus the facts will be found, and any points of law reserved, as at present, for the Court.

In support of the observation of Mr. Grove as to the undue advantage possessed by a plaintiff on the present system, I wish to record the fact, that in no case in my experience has a jury failed to find for the plaintiff on a contested question of infringement simpliciter, so effectually and unconsciously are the minds of the jury moulded by the first and last word, by evidence judiciously selected and applied, and by the prejudice skillfully imported into the case. The effect of this will be more striking when it is remembered, that most inventions are but improvements on existing things.

Assessors to a judge, in addition to or with a jury, would, in my opinion, be an aggravation rather than an alleviation of the evils of the present system; but if the responsibility be thrown on the judge and assessors of finding or ascertaining the facts, the judge or the court would apply the law.

The granting or refusal of patents, the proceedings relating to disclaimers and amendments, the proceedings in an action as to particulars of breaches and objections, and other interlocutory matters, may well be left to law officers and their assessors, or to special commissioners, as contemplated and provided by the Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852. Much may be done to reform and simplify the proceedings in an action by eliminating the immaterial questions; but the ultimate determination of these rights frequently involves questions deserving the consideration of the highest tribunals of the country.

THOMAS WEBSTER.

Temple, Feb. 8, 1860.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—Frederick Jackson Rhodes, of Alford, Lincolnshire, in and for the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln; and Henry Tremmenheere Johns, of Ringwood, Hampshire, in and for the county of Hants.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

LAW OF PROPERTY AMENDMENT BILL.

(LORD CHANCELLOR).

Sect. 1. That no judgment, statute, or recognisance shall affect any land, (of whatever tenure), as to a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, or a mortgagee, (whether such purchaser or mortgagee have notice or not of any such judgment, statute, or recognisance), unless a writ, or other due process of execution of such judgment, statute, or recognisance, shall have been issued and registered, as hereinafter is mentioned, before the execution of the conveyance or mortgage to him, and the payment of the purchase or mortgage money by him; but as to judgments, statutes, or recognisances already entered up, the same shall be binding on purchasers and mortgagees as far as by law they were binding on them before the passing of this act, if any writ of execution or other process issued thereon at any time before the 1st November, 1860, be registered as hereinafter mentioned on or before that day: provided always, that no judgment, statute, or recognisance, nor any writ of execution or other process thereon, shall affect any land, of whatever tenure, as to a bonâ fide purchaser or mortgagee, although execution or other process shall have issued thereon, and have been duly registered, unless such execution or other process shall be executed and put in force within nine calendar months from the time when it was registered.

2. The registry hereinafter required of any writ of execution, or other due process on any judgment, statute, or recognisance, in order to bind a purchaser or mortgagee, shall be made by a memorandum or minute referring to the judgment, statute, or recognisance already registered, so as to connect the registry of the writ of execution or other process therewith; and such memorandum or minute to be left with the senior Master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, who shall forthwith enter the particulars in a book, in alphabetical order, by the name of the person in whose behalf the judgment, statute, or recognisance upon which the writ of execution or other process issued was registered, and also the year and the day of the month when every such memorandum or minute is left with him, and such officer shall be entitled for any such registry to the sum of 5s.; and all persons shall be at liberty to search the same book, in addition to all the other books in the same office, on payment of the sum of 1s. only: and all the provisions in this act in regard to writs of execution or other process, and the registry thereof, or otherwise relating thereto, shall extend, mutatis mutandis, to writs of execution or other due process issuing on judgments of the several Courts of Common Pleas of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and of Pleas of the County Palatine of Durham: but none of these provisions are to extend to Ireland.

3. And whereas, by an act passed in the 4 & 5 Will. & M., intituled "An Act for the better Discovery of Judgments in the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, in Westminster," it was enacted, that no judgment not docketed and entered in books in the manner thereby provided should affect any lands or tenements, as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates: and whereas, by several later acts, judgments are required to be registered with more particulars than were required by the said recited act; and it is thereby enacted, that judgments not so registered shall not affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until the same shall be registered in manner thereby required; and in obedience to a direction in one of the same acts contained the dockets existing under the said first-recited act have been finally closed: and whereas the said several later acts do not expressly enact that judgments not docketed as thereby required shall not have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates, in consequence whereof such heirs, executors, or administrators have been held to have lost the protection which they enjoyed under the said first-recited act, and it is expedient that the same should be restored: be it therefore declared and enacted, that no judgment which has not already been, or which shall not hereafter be, entered or docketed under the several acts now in force, and which passed subsequently to the said act of the 4 & 5 Will. & M., so as to bind lands, tenements, or hereditaments as against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, shall have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates.

4. No judgments which, since the passing of an act of the 1 & 2 Vict., intituled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Mesne Process and Civil Actions except in certain Cases, for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors, and for amending the Law for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," (being one of the acts hereinbefore referred to), have been registered under the provisions therein contained, or contained in the later act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, as explained and amended by the act of the session of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, (being two other of the acts hereinbefore referred to), or which shall hereafter be so registered, shall have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their executors', testators', or intestates' estates, unless at the death of the testator or intestate five years shall not have elapsed from the date of the entry thereof on the docket, or from the only or last re-registry thereof, as the case may be, which re-registry from time to time is hereby authorised to be made in manner directed by the said act of the 2 & 3 Vict., as explained and amended by the act of the 18 & 19 Vict.; but it shall be deemed sufficient to secure such preference as aforesaid if such a memorandum as was required in the first instance is again left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas within five years before the death of the testator or intestate, although more than five years shall have expired by effluxion of time since the last previous registration, before such last-mentioned memorandum or minute was left; and so toties quoties upon every re-registry.

5. In the construction of the previous provisions the term "judgment" shall be taken to include registered decrees, orders of courts of equity and bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment.

6. No purchaser for valuable consideration, or mortgagee, shall be bound by any implied or constructive notice of any charge, or of any other act, matter, or thing affecting the title to the property purchased or taken in mortgage, unless the court shall be of opinion that the conduct of such purchaser or mortgagee amounted to fraud.

7. Where any actual waiver of the benefit of any covenant or condition in any lease, on the part of any lessor, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be proved to have taken place after the passing of this act in any one particular instance, such actual waiver shall not, unless a contrary intention appear, be assumed or deemed to extend to any instance or any breach of covenant or condition other than that to which such waiver shall specially relate, nor to be a general waiver of the benefit of any such covenant or condition.

8. Where by any instrument any hereditaments have been or shall be limited to uses, all uses thereunder, whether expressed or implied by law, and whether immediate or future, or contingent or executory, or to be declared under any power therein contained, shall take effect when and as they arise by force of, and by relation to, the estate and seisin originally vested in the person seised to the uses, and the continued existence in him or elsewhere of any seisin to uses or scintilla juris shall not be deemed necessary for the support of, or to give effect to, future or contingent or executory uses, nor shall any such seisin to uses or scintilla juris be deemed to be suspended, or to remain or to subsist in him or elsewhere.

9. The 24th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, shall be read and construed as if the words "or mortgagee" had followed the word "purchaser" in every place where the latter word is introduced in the said section.

10. In taxing the costs of preparing abstracts of title, where unnecessary length is complained of, the Taxing Master shall not treat the 24th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, as authorising or requiring any information in regard to title which would not have been justified by the practice of solicitors acting bonâ fide before the passing of the said act, the provision of the said section having been directed against fraud only.

11. Where any trustee, executor, or administrator shall apply for the opinion, advice, or direction of a judge of the Court of Chancery under the 30th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the petition or statement shall state the facts concisely, and shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and such petition or statement shall be signed by counsel, and the judge by whom it is to be answered may require the petitioner or applicant to attend him by counsel, either in chambers or in court, where he deems it necessary to have the assistance of counsel.

12. Sect. 32 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, is hereby repealed.

13. This act is not to extend to Scotland.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Henry Adams, Esq., Attorney-General, to be a member of the Legislative Council of the island of Hong Kong; also Frederick William Green, Esq., to be a member of the Legislative Council of the said island of Hong Kong whilst executing the duties of Attorney-General of that island.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAWS relating to the CHURCH and the CLERGY. By H. W. CRIPPS,
M.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, Recorder of Lichfield.
The Third Edition, revised and enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to the present time.

Since the publication of the first edition, the progress of legislation on the subjects treated of has rendered necessary considerable alterations and additions in this and in the preceding edition, and while much new matter has been introduced, all that has become obsolete has been omitted. In many other matters the law has been materially altered, and doubtful points have been settled by recently-decided cases, all which are now to be found in the present edition.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 18, 1860.

To perform the last offices for the dead, and to carry out the wishes expressed by a deceased friend in his lifetime with regard to the disposition of his property, are amongst the most sacred acts of friendship. It should be the policy of a considerate law to render the position of an executor as little onerous, embarrassing, and open to litigation as possible, consistently with the reasonable precautions which it must necessarily take to protect the interests of claimants against the estate or under the will of the deceased, and with the guards against fraud which it raises up by those statutes, which attach many solemnities to the valid expression of such wishes. Untouched, however, by legislation of this nature is the donatio mortis causa; and amongst the difficult questions that arise to perplex an executor is the claim of a donee mortis causa. An executor treads on sufficiently dangerous ground when he has to decide upon the facts, whether the circumstances incidental to a valid gift of this nature have happened or not; but by careful consideration, and the application of common sense, he may satisfy himself whether there has been a sufficient delivery to the donee by the donor in his last illness, subject to revocation if he recover; but the foundation of his decision must be a matter of law—what is the subject-matter of a donatio mortis causa? Instead, however, of our law being a guide to him, the subtle distinctions that have been taken will be found to puzzle, and not to enlighten, him.

It is laid down in all the books that there must be an actual delivery of the thing, and transfer of the possession, and that a delivery of a mere symbol is not sufficient. (Toller's Exors. 232-235; Wms. Exors.)

No difficulty will arise from the application of this principle when the subject-matter is a corporeal chattel capable of actual delivery, such as a purse, a ring, or a jewel. So, again, where the subject is a corporeal chattel of too bulky a nature to admit of actual delivery, a delivery of an approximate nature is allowed; as the delivery of the key of a trunk, (Jones v. Selby, Pre. Ch. 300), or the key of a warehouse, (Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. sen. 434), passes the goods. But where there has been a delivery of a chose in action an executor acts at his own peril, from the difficulty of applying the two rules above laid down—rules established at a time when the Courts shuddered at the idea of an assignment of a chose in action; and it is only by slow degrees, and case by case, that a sanction to such a proceeding has been won from their coyness. The consequence is, that the decisions stop at a most inconvenient halting place, and for consistency sake they must either be extended, or their effect curtailed.

Lay executors, and their legal advisers too, may well wonder at a distinction which says that the handing over of bonds, bank notes, promissory notes payable to bearer, and bills of exchange indorsed in blank, would pass the property to a donee mortis causa, but a similar dealing with cheques on bankers, promissory notes not payable to bearer, and bills of exchange not indorsed in blank, would not pass the property. The law on this subject is thus stated, (1 Wms. Exors. 191 et seq.):—"A bond may be the subject of a donatio mortis causa, because the property is considered to pass by the delivery. The same has been considered with respect to bank notes, because the property is transferred by delivery. And on the same principle it would seem that with regard to all negotiable instruments, which require nothing more than delivery to pass to the donee, the money secured by them may be the subject of a donatio mortis causa. For since it has been so adjudged of bank notes, there appears no reason why Exchequer notes, or promissory notes payable to bearer, or bills of exchange indorsed in blank, should not have the same capability, for in all those cases the property passes by delivery." And the cases cited bear out this proposition. But even in the case of bonds the Courts had to make an exertion to overcome their scruples; for in the early case of Parthwick v. Friend, (2 Coll. 362, note (c)), the grandfather of both the plaintiff and the defendant having, in his last illness, delivered to the defendant a tin box, containing fifteen East India bonds, of 100*l.* each, and afterwards died intestate, the then Master of the Rolls, because the bonds were mere choses in action, and the delivery did not vest a legal property in the money, decreed that they should be distributed with the rest of the personal estate. But twenty years later, in Snellgrove v. Baily, (3 Atk. 213), where a bond for 100*l.* was given by S. to B., who gave it to the defendant on her death-bed, saying, "If I die it is yours, and then you have something," the Lord Chancellor held that that was a sufficient donatio mortis causa to pass the equitable interest, considering how far the Courts had gone in permitting assignments of choses in action. In Blount v. Burrow (4 Bro. C. C. 72) India bonds were admitted on both sides, on the authority of Snellgrove v. Baily, to be proper subjects of a donatio mortis causa. In Gardner v. Parker, (3 Mad. 184), which was a case of a gift of a bond for 1800*l.* by the testator, saying, "There, take that, and keep it," Sir J. Leach, V. C., decreed that the donee, upon indemnifying the executors, might use their names in suing upon it. So, again, of bank notes. (Ashton v. Dawson, 2 Coll. 363, note (c); Hill v. Chapman, 2 Bro. C. C. 612; Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 357). So of a Government tally. (Jones v. Selby, Pre. Ch. 300). In Williams on Executors it is further stated—"But where no property is transferred to the donee by delivery of the subject, there can be no valid donatio mortis causa. Thus, in Ward v. Turner, (2 Ves. sen. 434), South-sea annuity receipts were held not to be a proper subject." On the same ground, bills of exchange, not indorsed in blank, have been considered incapable of being the subjects of a donatio mortis causa. A promissory note, made by a man in his last illness, cannot operate as a donatio mortis causa, for it has not that reference to the death of the donor which is essential to such a gift. The same has been decided as to a cheque on a banker, which is an order for the payment of money, that may take effect immediately, and in the lifetime of the donor; so that it, generally speaking, is inconsistent with the nature of a donatio mortis causa.

Now, in the cases with regard to bonds, the reasons given for their recognition are, that a complete delivery takes place of that without which no one else can sue for the debt; that the donee, by burning or tearing the bond, would render it impossible for the obligee to enforce the claim upon it, as he was obliged at that time to allege profert of the deed; that there was a change of possession, and the gift, though to a volunteer, being complete inter vivos, the Courts of equity would enforce it. Although, now the doctrine of profert is changed, the delivery of bonds is still supported. And in Ward v. Turner, (2 Ves. sen. 434), Lord Hardwicke, C., says, "There is a great difference between delivery of a bond (which is a specialty, and itself the foundation of an action, and the destruction of which destroys the demand) and the delivery of a note payable to bearer, which is only evidence of a contract." He then goes on to say, that delivery of a symbol is not sufficient; so that, in this case, the Lord Chancellor would even have excluded notes payable to bearer.

It is to be observed, that Mr. Justice Williams' remark as to promissory notes applies to those notes only given by the testator himself, and not those in his hands given by third persons, which latter instruments must rest upon other grounds. Now, a distinction has been made between bank notes and promissory notes payable to bearer, and bills of exchange not indorsed in blank, in that in the former case the property in the money passes by delivery of the note; in the other that it does not, and, there not being a complete gift inter vivos, equity would not compel the executors to complete it. If the donations of promissory notes not payable to bearer, or bills of exchange not indorsed in blank, must be supported on the ground of equity rested upon in the old cases, it might be urged that the bond, in point of fact, is but a symbol; so of bank notes and other bills of exchange, and, in the cases before mentioned, the key of the warehouse and of the trunk; and therefore it is not true to say that a symbolical delivery is not allowed, or, if these are not symbols, neither are the promissory notes and bills in question, but that such a form of delivery is the most complete the subject admits of. Such an argument would, at all events, include the notes of third persons, and receipts for monies lent; and further, it may be urged that there really, in common sense, is no distinction between bonds and simple contract securities; and that in these days, when the object of the Courts is to arrive at the real meaning of the acts of parties, the intention is equally manifested by a delivery of the one as of the other. But it is not necessary that this reasoning should prevail, for the case of Duffield v. Elwes (1 Bligh, N. S., 497) lays down another, and the true, ground of equity, viz. that the delivery of the instrument creates an implied trust which equity can and will execute; in that case the delivery of the mortgage deeds of real estates was held, in the House of Lords, to constitute a valid donatio mortis causa. So, in Merideth v. Watson, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 1064), the same decision was come to as to mortgage deeds, and Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., says, by the delivery of the deed the debt passes.

In Moore v. Darton, (4 De G. & S. 517), where, upon a loan, the borrower had given the lender a receipt in the following form—"Received of Miss Darton 500*l.*, to bear interest at 4*l.* per cent. per annum"—Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., held it a good donatio mortis causa, "because," in this case, "it was something more than the mere evidence of a debt; it was a document contemporaneous with the creation of the debt; it was delivered to the agent of the debtor himself; the debt was a debt carrying interest without a contract to that effect beyond the advance. That particular contract, I agree, might have been entered into without writing; but as it was created by writing, proof of the writing, if possible, was essential to the recovery upon the contract." All this might be applied, without violence, to the description of a bill of exchange not indorsed in blank, or a promissory note not payable to bearer. The American lawyers have seen the fimsiness of the distinction, and Story, J., (1 Eq. Jur., c. 10, s. 607, p. 693), says—"As by our law there must be a delivery of the thing, or instrument which represents it, in order to make a good donatio mortis causa, if the thing is incapable of delivery, it cannot be the subject of such donation, for it is said there must be a parting with the legal power and dominion over the thing, which is evidenced only by delivery. Thus, a mere chose in action, not subsisting in any specific instrument, cannot pass by a donatio mortis causa. So it has been ruled that a promissory note or a bill of exchange, not payable to bearer or indorsed in blank, cannot so take effect, inasmuch as the property therein can pass by the delivery of the instrument;" and he cites, in a note, Miller v. Miller, Ward v. Turner, and two American cases to the same effect. "But it may admit of doubt whether the doctrine of these last cases can now upon principle be supported, for the ground upon which the Courts of equity now support donations mortis causa is not that a complete property in the thing must pass by the delivery, but it must so far pass by the delivery of the instrument as to give a title to the donee to the assistance of the Court of equity to make the donation complete. The doctrine no longer prevails, that where a delivery will not execute a complete gift inter vivos, it cannot create a donatio mortis causa, because it would not prevent the property from vesting in the executor; and as a Court of equity will not, inter vivos, compel a party to complete his gift, so it will not compel the executor to complete the gift of his testator. On the contrary, the doctrine now established by the highest authority is, that Courts of equity do not consider the interest as completely vested in the donee, but treat the delivery of the instrument as creating a trust for the donee, to be enforced in equity." He quotes Duffield v. Elwes. Notwithstanding the attempts which have been made in England to distinguish between a promissory note and a bond, in relation to the validity of a gift of a chose in action, there cannot in reason be any difference. A gift of either is valid as a symbolical delivery of the debt due on the note or bond, and all the delivery the subject is capable of. As to the reason given by Williams, J., as to these notes and bills if made by the testator, they must apply equally where the note, &c. is made payable to bearer, in which latter case, he says, it would pass. Then, since the Legislature has thought fit to uphold donations mortis causa, we submit that the intention of the parties is most effectually carried out, and that without any repugnance to decided cases, and upon the true principle of equity attaching to these cases, to the greater simplicity of the law, and to the ease, therefore, of executors, by abolishing any artificial distinction that prevents the same rule applying to promissory notes not payable to bearer, and bills of exchange not indorsed in blank, which does apply to promissory notes payable to bearer, or bills of exchange that are indorsed in blank.

A Manual of the Practice of the Court of Probate. By ALEXANDER STAVELEY HILL, D. C. L., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. [H. Sweet, 1860.]

THE act of Parliament which threw open the Prerogative Court to the Profession generally, by creating the Court of Probate, occasioned the issuing of many new rules, more or less explanatory, retrospectively of the working of the old system, and prospectively of the new. As might be expected under these circumstances, those books, the object of which was to explain the practice of the Prerogative Court, are wanting in useful practical information, while those which have been written with a view to explain the new system are at the best vague and uncertain. The little book, the title of which is at the head of this notice, seems to us to contain the information that is required by the practitioner, whether he be a member of the College of Advocates, or a proctor now called upon to adapt his practice to that of the other courts in Westminster Hall; or whether, having hitherto been solely conversant with the practice of the Courts of Common Law, he is now inducted into the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts. Dr. Hill, in his Manual, has followed the division of the Probate Court Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, and has arranged his subject under annotations upon the different sections of that act, introducing more especially the working of the Court, under the heads of "Powers of the Court," "Practice of the Court," "Practice of the District Registry," and "Practice of the County Court." The notes under these two latter heads will, we venture to think, be of the greatest use to country practitioners. The whole work shews that no pains have been spared on it, while all the cases which have been reported since the new court came into existence are referred to. Many decisions not reported are quoted, shewing that Dr. Hill has also been a regular attendant at the sittings of the Court. There is a useful note (p. 145) on the Confirmation of Executors Act, containing information which we have not seen elsewhere. The addition of the Acts of Parliament, and the Rules and Orders, which will be found in the Appendix, and a copious index, render the Manual really a handy book.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—George Frederick Carnell, of Sevenoaks, Kent, in and for the county of Kent; and Robert Growse, of Hastings, Sussex, in and for the county of Sussex.

PATENT RIGHT.

THE following extract from a paper read by Thomas Webster, Esq., barrister-at-law, before the Social Science Association in 1859, and lately reprinted, may be acceptable to our readers, who have had the advantage of perusing the observations of Mr. Grove and of Mr. Webster in our last two numbers:—

"Far be it from me to disparage the value of trial by jury. I believe it to be a shield against the infirmities of humanity, which in many cases cannot be over-estimated—to be the best tribunal for many cases which the wit of man has devised, and not inapplicable as an auxiliary in some few cases of conflict of testimony on facts of copyright and patent right. But the present course of proceeding, crowned by the jury trial, I believe to be the main cause of the grievance and well-founded complaints and dissatisfaction in the administration of this department of the law, and that a change in this respect would be the basis of other reforms.

"In elucidation of this question, it may be expedient to trace the progress of a contested action on copyright or patent right, many actual cases of which may be cited.

"The first step, notwithstanding the extension of jurisdiction recently conferred on the Courts of Common Law, is generally a bill in equity, presenting the view of the case which at the time appears most calculated to answer the object in view.

"This application is supported and opposed by affidavits and counter-affidavits of indefinite expansibility. The words of Lord Lyndhurst, when speaking on a recent occasion on the mode of taking evidence in the Court of Chancery*, admirably expose the pernicious consequence of this system:—'The basis of an affidavit is supplied by a scientific witness, then it is drawn by a solicitor, and settled by counsel, the result of which elaborate process is naturally a confusion of the scientific facts. It is commonly the case that unpractised witnesses, who may be quite conversant with the manufacture in question, and who give valuable evidence upon it as the basis of the affidavit, are continually induced to accept the ex parte version of it, without really understanding the effect of what is ostensibly their own evidence.' The filing of affidavits having ceased, the motion is arrived at, and arguments of greater or less length are heard before a judge, perhaps the most competent, from knowledge and position, to weigh the similarities and dissimilarities of the conflicting affidavits, settled as explained with all the professional skill, scientific and legal, that money can command. The parties are then handed over to, and have to start afresh before, another tribunal, for a trial by jury. This stage passed, the matter is ripe for the opinion of the Court on the points of law reserved at the trial, the result of which is, generally, (if funds do not fail), either a new trial or an appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, thence to the House of Lords, and a return, after some indefinite period, to the same learned judge in equity with whom the proceedings commenced, and possibly to a rehearsal before the Lords Justices or the Lord Chancellor, as the finale, unless the learned judge in equity, on the matter being brought before him the second time, should order a new trial.

"The even tenor of the progress of this drama may be interrupted by various interlocutory applications, the sources of great delay and expense, to the Courts of equity and law, to the judge at chambers, by a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and possibly a scire facias to repeal the patent.

"Those conversant with the litigation in the cases of the patents of Kay, Walton, Muntz, Heath, Lister, Bovill, Hills, and Betts, will recognise in the above no exaggerated pictures, and counterparts of them may be found in several recent cases of copyright in books and designs. The questions in these cases are substantially two—namely, piracy and title; for the incidental question, of the sufficiency of the specification or registration, as unconnected with the above, arising only occasionally and incidentally, may for the present purpose be disregarded.

"The proceedings in a patent action may not be inaptly termed 'legal bush-fighting': the plaintiff is anxious to throw his net as wide as possible, so as to include in its meshes all possible imitations or improvements; and the defendant is on the look-out to take advantage of the too great extension of the net, and entangle its meshes in the fatal toils of prior invention, or to lie by and impeach the validity of the patent by the production of a book, or specification, or instance of prior publication and use.

"The act of 1835, commonly called Lord Brougham's Act, contains the first legislative attempt to prevent the plaintiff being thus tripped up. A defendant is required to give notice of objections intended to be relied on, impeaching the validity of the patent. The usefulness of this measure was much impaired by decisions which introduced an amount of uncertainty and refinement by which the provision was virtually frittered away.

"By the Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852, the plaintiff is required to deliver particulars of his breaches, so as to give the defendant specific information as to the part of the invention alleged to have been infringed, or the machine or process complained of—that is, of the act of infringement; and the defendant is required to give information as to the time and place of any instance of prior publication or use alleged to impeach the patent. Each party, therefore, has now the power of obtaining information of the nature of the complaint, and of the answer to be made.

"Professional ingenuity, however, has contrived to convert this most wholesome enactment into a source of considerable embarrassment and expense, with which the judges have not attempted to deal, although made a matter of grave complaint on the trial of almost every action. True it is, that the plaintiff knows the extent of the matter to be brought against his title, but he knows not which part of it is intended to be used—he has no means of extracting the wheat from the chaff. On the other hand, the defendant, from not knowing with precision the way in which the infringement will be presented, dare not limit his particulars, for fear of being excluded from the very objection which the way in which the plaintiff shapes his case may render essential; and instances are notorious in which some fifty specifications, books, printed documents, and places of user have been inserted in the particulars of objections, whereas at the trial one or two, or a small portion of one or two, only are relied on. The consequence is, that the plaintiff must employ highly-paid professional talent, legal and scientific, to read all this mass, and to investigate as far as possible what part may possibly be so material as to require explanation or an answer. The expense so occasioned in preparing for trial is enormous, but the consequences at the trial are equally serious.

"The present Lord Chancellor, (Lord Campbell), when Chief Justice, had his attention directed to the subject in many of the patent actions recently tried by that most learned and experienced judge; and in the last, or nearly the last, case, suggested a course, which was acceded to by the parties, that the specifications relied on should be put in evidence, with so much oral evidence as was necessary on either side to ascertain facts, and that these documents, with his notes and the models, should be brought before the Court on motion, and that the Court should be at liberty to draw such inferences and find such facts as a jury might have drawn or found. Had the trial progressed in the ordinary course, two days at the least would have been uselessly consumed, and the result would have been incumbered with the finding of a jury, the ordinary and attendant uncertainties of which would probably have, as in most similar cases, involved a second, and possibly a third, jury trial.

"In nine cases out of ten there is no question of disputed fact with which the Court cannot deal in a much more satisfactory manner than a jury. The object to be attained is a case for the opinion of the Court upon written documents and machines, with such explanation of the terms of art as the case may require. What is the province of the Court, and what of the jury, as to the interpretation of the terms of art, has furnished some curious discussion and speculation among the learned judges.

"The extreme dissatisfaction resulting from this state of things has led to the suggestion of various remedies, amongst which a special court for the trial of patent causes is, perhaps, the most popular*. Much may be urged, both by way of analogy and otherwise, in favour of a special court, but much also may be said against the policy of multiplying tribunals for special subjects, unless the existing tribunals are clearly inadequate for the purpose.

"The decisions of the superior Courts, when obtained, cannot be regarded as presenting more instances of uncertainty in relation to property in intellectual labour than in relation to other property. The true course would appear to be to reform the proceedings, whereby a decision may be attained with less delay and expense: without such reform a special court could not afford the required relief. In considering this subject the two existing tribunals, of the law officers and of the commissioners, must not be lost sight of. Much that has often been suggested might be effected by making the Commissioners of Patents an efficient, instead of a mere official, body.

"Experience shews that the object to be arrived at in most cases is a special case founded on facts, about which there can be no dispute, or, if any, such only as ought to be disposed of by the law officer, or a commissioner of ordinary experience in questions of this nature. The object in the administration of justice is, first to ascertain the facts, and then to apply the law. A review of nine-tenths of recent patent cases will shew that no difficulty exists in ascertaining the facts, the main difficulty being in applying the law on the question of infringement, whether the act of the defendant was an imitation of, and improvement of, the invention claimed by the plaintiff, or of some antecedent invention then the property of the public.

"It may be mentioned that in no case within my recollection has a jury failed to find a verdict for a plaintiff on the simple question of infringement—a remarkable fact, which ought never to be forgotten in considering the working of the jury system in connexion with this class of cases.

"Another subject of importance adverted to in a communication to the Liverpool meeting of the National Association, and printed in the volume of its proceedings, is a compulsory power of obtaining licenses under patents. The annals of invention shew that most inventions have been the subject of patents; most recent inventions are improvements on some prior invention, and most frequently on an existing patent. Such patent may be used for the purpose of obstruction, and experience shews this to be a real grievance, for which the application of some remedy, analogous to that of compulsory purchase under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, should be applied. The learned and experienced Mr. Commissioner Hill called attention to this subject in his evidence before the committee of the House of Lords in 1851, and it would appear a proper subject to be dealt with by arbitration, under the control of the commissioners.

"The multiplication of patents under the present system, as adverted to in the Report of the Committee of the British Association to the meeting at Aberdeen, is one great source of litigation, encouraging speculative actions, and introducing a species of uncertainty to an extent which can hardly be believed by persons not conversant with the operation of the system.

"The rendering the Commissioners of Patents an efficient body, instead of limiting its operation, as at present, to official routine, would afford the means of checking the present unreasonable multiplication of legal rights, and of producing some consistency in the granting of patents, and in the practice as to disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations, with other advantages, which have been repeatedly suggested by persons conversant with the subject."

BILLS IN PROGRESS.

COURT OF CHANCERY BILL.

(LORD CHANCELLOR).

A Bill intituled "An Act to make better Provision for the Relief of Prisoners in Contempt of the High Court of Chancery, and Pauper Defendants, and for the more efficient Despatch of Business in the said Court."

- Sect. 1. The Queen's prison to be visited quarterly.
2. Prisoners and other persons may be examined on oath.
3. Provision where a prisoner is an idiot or lunatic.
4. Solicitor to Suitors Fund may be appointed solicitor to pauper defendants.
5. Additional salary to solicitor to Suitors Fund.
6. Expenses incurred for prisoners and pauper defendants to be paid out of Suitors Fund.
7. Gaolers to make reports to Lord Chancellor of all Chancery prisoners.
8. Powers to make general orders.
9. Custody of deeds under the care of late masters.
10. Appointment of additional chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls.
11. Power to appoint junior clerks.
12. Power to transfer such chief clerk and junior clerks to any of the Vice-Chancellors.
13. Duties, &c. of clerks under this act.
14. By whom orders under this act are to be made.

ATTORNIES AND SOLICITORS BILL.

(MR. JOHN LOCKE, MR. EDWIN JAMES, AND MR. DENMAN).

A Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Act for consolidating and amending several of the Laws relating to Attornies and Solicitors practising in England and Wales."

Preamble recites stats. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 86; and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 88.

- Sect. 1. Interpretation clause. Attorney. Solicitor.
2. Sect. 7 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act shall be repealed, and any person having taken the degree of bachelor of arts or bachelor of laws in any of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, Durham, or London, or in the Queen's University in Ireland, and who, at any time after having taken such degree, and either before or after the passing of this act, has been bound by and has duly served under articles of clerkship to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of three years, and has been examined and sworn, after the expiration of such term, in manner directed by the first herein-before-mentioned act, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor, and service for any part of the said term, not exceeding one year, with the London agent of such attorney or solicitor, in the proper business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor, either by virtue of any stipulation in such articles, or with the permission of such attorney or solicitor, shall be and be deemed to have been good service under such articles for such part of the said term; and where any person has, before the passing of this act, and at any time after having taken such degree, been bound as aforesaid for five years, he may, after having duly served three years of such term in such manner as would have been required if he had been bound for three years only, and having been examined and sworn as aforesaid, be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor, and the articles of clerkship shall be deemed to have determined as if they had determined by effluxion of time.

3. Any person who shall for the term of ten years have been a bonâ fide clerk to an attorney or solicitor, or attorneys or solicitors, and who, either before or after the passing of this act, has been bound by and has duly served under articles of clerkship to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of three years, and has been examined and sworn, after the expiration of such term, in manner directed by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor, and service for any part of the said term, not exceeding one year, with the London agent of such attorney or solicitor, in the proper business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor, either by virtue of any stipulation in such articles, or with the permission of such attorney or solicitor, shall be and be deemed to have been good service under such articles for such part of the said term; and where any person has, before the passing of this act, and at any time after, been a bonâ fide clerk to an attorney or solicitor, or attorneys or solicitors, for the term of ten years, and been bound, before the passing of this act, for five years, he may, after having duly served three years of such term in such manner as would have been required if he had been bound for three years only, and having been examined and sworn as aforesaid, be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor, and the articles of clerkship shall be deemed to have determined as if they had determined by effluxion of time.

4. Where the three years expire between any two of the legal terms, admission may take place in the term preceding the expiration of the three years.

5. The Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, may, if they think fit, from time to time, by regulations to be made by them, direct that any persons having successfully passed any examination already established in the University of Oxford or Cambridge for students not members of the university, or any other examination of a similar nature (to be specified in such regulations) hereafter established in any of the universities hereinbefore mentioned, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor, after having been subsequently bound by, and having duly served under, articles of clerkship to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of four years, and been examined and sworn as aforesaid after the expiration of such term; and the said judges may from time to time revoke or alter such regulations as they think fit, but not so as to allow a less term of service than four years.

6. Sect. 6 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act shall apply as well to any person bound as therein mentioned as a clerk to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of four years only, where under the said regulations that term is sufficient, as to any person so bound for the term of five years, and shall be read and construed accordingly.

7. Judges may require examination in general knowledge, either before articles or before admission, with power to dispense therewith in special cases.

8. Articled clerks not to hold other office or employment.

9. The examination which, under the firstly hereinbefore-mentioned act or this act, is authorised and required touching the fitness and capacity of a person to act as an attorney or as a solicitor (as the case may be) before his admission as an attorney or solicitor shall be deemed to include such examination touching his fitness and capacity to act in matters of business usually transacted or performed by attorneys or so-licitors as the examiners for the time being deem proper, subject nevertheless to any rules, orders, or regulations for conducting the said examination to be from time to time made in manner provided by the firstly hereinbefore-mentioned act.

10. Persons not to be admitted in palatine courts without examination.

11. Extent of act.

12. Recited act and this act to be construed as one act.

TRADING COMPANIES, &c. BILL.

(LORD CHANCELLOR).

A Bill intituled "An Act for the Incorporation, Regulation, and Winding up of Trading Companies and other Associations."

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Prohibition of partnerships exceeding certain number. (Banking, 10; other business, 20). 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 4; 21 Vict. c. 49, s. 13*.

3. Division of act.

PART I.—CONSTITUTION AND INCORPORATION OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS FORMED UNDER THIS ACT.

Memorandum of Association.

4. Mode of forming company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 3.

5. The liability of the members of a company formed under this act may, according to the memorandum of association, be limited either to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them, or to such amount as the members may respectively undertake by the memorandum of association to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up.

6. Where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to the amount unpaid on their shares, hereinafter referred to as a company limited by shares, the memorandum of association shall contain the following things:—

- (1). The name of the proposed company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word in such name:
- (2). The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate:
- (3). The objects for which the proposed company is to be established:
- (4). A declaration that the liability of the members is limited:
- (5). The amount of capital with which the company proposes to be registered, divided into shares of a certain fixed amount.

Subject to the following regulations:—

- (1). That no subscriber shall take less than one share:
- (2). That each subscriber of the memorandum of association shall write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes:
- (3). That in the case of a banking company the shares into which the capital of the company is divided shall not be of less amount than 100*l.* each.

7. Where a company is formed on the principle of having the liability of its members limited to such amount as the members respectively undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of the same being wound up, hereinafter referred to as a company limited by guarantee, the memorandum of association shall contain the following things—that is to say,

- (1). The name of the proposed company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word in such name:
- (2). The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is proposed to be situate:
- (3). The objects for which the proposed company is to be established:

* Many of the clauses which are here briefly noticed are materially different from the enactments for which they are substituted.

- (4). A declaration that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of the same being wound up, during the time that he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts of the company, and of the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the company, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributors amongst themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount.

Subject to the following restriction:—

That no company formed for the purposes of banking shall be registered as a company limited by guarantee, unless each member undertakes, in the event of the company being wound up, to contribute to its assets, for the purposes aforesaid, a sum, if required, of not less than 100l.

8. Memorandum of association of an unlimited company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 10.
9. Stamp, signature, and effect of memorandum of association. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 7.
10. Power of certain companies to alter memorandum of association. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 37.

Articles of Association.

11. Regulations to be prescribed by articles of association. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 9.
12. Application of Table A. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 8.
13. Stamp, signature, and effect of articles of association. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 11.

General Provisions.

14. Registration of memorandum of association and articles of association. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 12.
15. Effect of registration. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 13; 21 Vict. c. 14, s. 4.
16. Copies of memorandum and articles to be given to members. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 26; 21 Vict. c. 14, s. 10.
17. Prohibition against identity of names in companies. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 6.

18. Where any association is about to be formed under this act as a company limited by guarantee, if it proves to the Board of Trade that it is formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or for any other useful object, and that it is the intention of such association to apply the profits, if any, or other income of the association, in promoting its object, and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to the members of the association, the Board of Trade may, by license under the hand of one of the secretaries or assistant secretaries, direct such association to be registered with limited liability without the addition of the word "limited" to its name, and such association may be registered accordingly, and upon registration shall enjoy all the privileges and be subject to the obligations by this act imposed on companies limited by guarantee, with the exceptions that none of the provisions of this act that require a limited company to use the word "limited" as any part of its name, or to publish its name, or to send a list of its members, directors, or managers to the registrar, shall apply to an association so registered: any license by the Board of Trade may be granted upon such conditions and subject to such regulations as the board thinks fit to impose, and such conditions and regulations shall be binding on the association, and may, at the option of the said board, be inserted in the memorandum and articles of association, or in one of such documents.

19. No company formed for charitable or other like purposes, not involving the procurement of gain to the company or to the individual members thereof, shall, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, hold more than two acres of land; but the Board of Trade may, by license under the hand of one of their principal secretaries, empower any such company to hold lands in such quantity, and subject to such conditions, as they think fit.

20. Liability of banking company that is not registered as such. 21 Vict. c. 49, s. 17.

PART II.—DISTRIBUTION OF CAPITAL OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS FORMED UNDER THIS ACT.

21. Nature of interest in company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 15.
22. Subscribers to be registered. 20 Vict. c. 47.
23. Any transfer of the share or other interest of a deceased member of a company formed under this act, made by his personal representative, shall, notwithstanding such personal representative may not himself be registered as a member, be of the same validity as if he had been so registered at the time of the execution of the instrument of transfer.

24. Register of members. 20 Vict. c. 47, ss. 16, 17.
25. Annual list of members. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 17.
26. Penalty on company not keeping a proper register.
27. Company to give notice of conversion of capital into stock. 21 Vict. c. 14, s. 6.
28. Effect of conversion of shares into stock.
29. Entry of trusts on register. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 19; 21 Vict. c. 49, s. 15.
30. Certificate of shares. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 21.
31. Inspection of register. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 23.
32. Power to close register. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 24.
33. Notice of increase of capital and of members to be given to registrar. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 37.
34. Remedy for improper entry or omission of entry in register. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 25; 21 Vict. c. 14, s. 9.
35. Notice to registrar of rectification of register.
36. Register to be evidence. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 26.

PART III.—MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS FORMED UNDER THIS ACT.

Provisions for Protection of Creditors.

37. Registered office of company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 82.
38. Notice of situation of registered office. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 29.
39. Publication of name by a limited company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 30.
40. Penalties on non-publication of name. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 31.
41. Banking companies to publish statement entered in schedule. 22 Vict. c. 60, s. 4.
42. Every company formed under this act, and not having a capital divided into shares, shall keep at its registered office a register containing the names and addresses and the occupations of its directors or managers, and shall send to the registrar of joint-stock companies a copy of such register, and shall from time to time notify to the registrar any change that takes place in such directors or managers.
43. If any company formed under this act, and not having a capital divided into shares, makes default in keeping a register of its directors or managers, or in sending a copy of such register to the registrar, in compliance with the foregoing rules, or in notifying to the registrar any change that takes place in such directors or managers, such delinquent company shall incur a penalty not exceeding 5l. for every day during which such default continues.

PART IV.—CONTRIBUTORIES OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS FORMED UNDER THIS ACT.

71. Every person who has agreed to become a member of a company formed under this act, and whose name is entered on the register of members, and who is not shewn by such register to have ceased to be a member at the time of the commencement of the winding up, shall, for the purpose of contribution to the assets of the company, be deemed to be an existing member of such company.

72. Every person who has agreed to become a member of a company formed under this act, and whose name has been entered on the register of members, but who is shewn by such register to have ceased to be a member before the time of the commencement of the winding up, shall, for the purpose of contribution to the assets of the company, be deemed to be a past member of the company, and his membership shall be deemed to have continued from the date of the first entry of his name in the register of members until the time at which the entry is made on the register whereby he is shewn to have ceased to be a member.

73. Every person who has agreed to become a member of a company formed under this act, in respect of some share or interest which is not represented on the register by any holder, but whose name is not entered on the register of members, shall, for the purpose of contribution to the assets of the company, be deemed to be an existing member, in the same manner as if his name had been duly entered on the register.

74. The personal representative of a deceased member, who has received any dividend or profit in respect of his shares or other interest in the company declared after the expiration of twelve months from the time at which probate of the will or letters of administration to the effects of such deceased member was or were taken out, shall, for the purpose of contribution to the assets of the company, be deemed to be an existing member of the company in respect of such shares or other interest, in the same manner as if his name had been duly entered on the register as member in respect of such shares or interest.

75. If any person who has not agreed to become a member of a company participates in the profits of such company, or otherwise deals with the same in such manner as would, if the company were an individual, make him a partner of, or liable in respect of the debts of, such company, such person shall, for the purpose of contribution to the assets of the company, be deemed to be an existing member of such company, to such extent or in respect of such shares or other interest as the court, having regard to the circumstances, may think just; subject to this qualification, that no person shall be deemed to be an existing member of a company, in pursuance of this section, unless the participation in profits, or other dealing in respect of which he is sought to be made a member, has occurred within one year prior to the commencement of the winding up.

76. Liability of existing and past members of an unlimited company. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 62.

77. In the event of a limited company formed under this act being wound up, every existing and past member of such company shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of the debts of the company, and the costs, charges, and expenses of the winding up, and for payment of such sums as may be required for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, with the qualifications following—that is to say,

- (1). No past member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company if he has ceased to be an existing member for a period of one year or upwards prior to the commencement of the winding up;
- (2). In the case of a company limited by shares, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as an existing or past member;
- (3). In the case of a company limited by guarantee, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount of the undertaking entered into on his behalf by the memorandum of association.

78. Where any person is liable to indemnify any member of the company against the debts of the company, and the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same, or against contribution for the adjustment of the rights of the contributors amongst themselves, by reason of such person being in equity the owner of the shares or interest in the company in respect of which the liability of such member has arisen, or by reason of his having entered into any express or implied undertaking to indemnify any member of the company, such person shall, to the extent of his liability, be bound to contribute to the assets as an existing member.

79. Liability of representatives and devisees of contributories. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 65.

80. Definition of "contributory." 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 65.

81. For the purpose of ascertaining the liability, as between themselves, of members of a company having a capital divided into shares, the following rule shall be adopted—that is to say,

- (1). In the case of a company other than a limited company, every transferee of shares shall, in a degree proportioned to the shares transferred, indemnify the transferor against all existing and future debts of the company;
- (2). In the case of a limited company, every transferee shall indemnify the transferor against all calls made or accrued due on the shares transferred subsequently to the transfer.

82. Nothing in this act contained shall invalidate any provision contained in any policy of insurance or other contract whereby the liability of individual members upon any such policy or contract is restricted, or whereby the funds of the company are alone made liable in respect of such policy or contract.

PART V.—WINDING UP OF COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS FORMED UNDER THIS ACT.

TO CAPITALISTS.—FIRST-CLASS DIVIDEND

MINES can be BOUGHT TO PAY 13L PER CENT., without risk, by spreading the investment over a few Mines, upon the principle of mutual guarantee or assurance. A higher per-centage may be obtained in others, but not with the same stability.

Progressive Mines, or those not yet arrived at a dividend state, best suit the speculator who prefers getting a large increase to his capital to simply receiving dividends; and upon Mines of this description a profit may be realised of at least 40l. per cent. in twelve months. But it must be understood that the selection must be made under experienced advice. To illustrate this position, and also to shew that an investment to Mines may be made without risk, I made in 1858 a selection for my friends, which in the following year realised a profit to them of 23l. per cent. upon the Dividend, and 42l. upon the Progressive. I adopted the same system in 1859, and at the present time a profit can be realised of 42l. per cent. on the Dividend, and 54l. per cent. upon the Progressive. My List is now completed for 1860, and may be had on application. I can hardly expect that the results will be quite equal to last year's; still I am very sanguine they will be found extremely satisfactory. Having had an experience extending over seventeen years as a Mining Broker, I may, without presumption, deem myself well qualified to advise with those who are disposed to invest in this description of property.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 25, 1860.

SINCE an article in a previous number, (ante, p. 31), relative to the capture of private property at sea, was written, we rejoice to see that a deputation of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce has had an interview with our Premier, and, after endeavouring to impress upon him the policy of adopting their peculiar views, according to which immunity from capture during time of war ought to be allowed to the private property of the enemy at sea, has been firmly told by Lord Palmerston that the doctrines of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce are wholly inadmissible; and we think that by far the greater majority of Englishmen, who have the interests of peace and of their country at heart, will unhesitatingly confirm the opinion enunciated by Lord Palmerston.

It is, of course, in accordance with the interests of such countries as France, Russia, Austria, and perhaps Prussia, with large standing armies, and with navies inferior to our own, to introduce such a change in the system of international law as would enable them to carry on war by land, while their commerce would be safe by sea. Those and other countries, such as the United States, in fact, ask England to consent to a change of the law which would deprive her of half her strength, while they would retain their own unimpaired; for we do not hear any change proposed with reference to the mode of carrying on war by land.

It is true, that, as a kind of equivalent, it is proposed by some nations, and, above all, by the United States, that if England will consent to allow the private property of the subjects of a belligerent to be exempt from capture by armed public vessels, they will no longer employ privateers in time of war; asking, in fact, that England should in time of war give up the advantage which she now possesses, in consequence of the predominance of her naval power, and offering, in return, to give up, not any other advantage which England does not now enjoy, but one which she would in common with other nations give up—the use of privateering.

However little such proposals may be for the interests of England, rightly understood, there is, nevertheless, a small, but wealthy and influential, body of men who doubtless think that it is for their own interest to yield to such proposals as those of the United States upon this subject. "Omnia post nummos" seems to be their motto—peace at any price, save at the price of profits, the principle by which they are guided—the acquisition of enormous wealth their end.

For this purpose they will not cease to agitate and press forward every argument possibly available in support of their views. In a former number we answered all their arguments except one, which we now propose to notice. It is said that belligerents, even if they do not consider private property on land free from capture, at any rate have manifested a strong disposition to abstain from inflicting unnecessary injury upon it; and it is said that "the present practice of capturing private property at sea appears to have had its origin in the piratical character of early navigators; and that, although during times of peace the inviolability of property at sea has long been acknowledged by all civilised countries, war is no sooner declared than the order is issued to "seize, burn, and destroy the maritime property of the enemy," in a spirit, as is alleged, "worthy only of the most barbarous times."

Now, if the president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce means to assert, that upon the commencement of a war an order issues not only to seize, but to burn and destroy the private maritime property of the enemy, we think he is scarcely accurate. The usual order granting reprisals against the enemy are, we believe, similar to that issued in the late war against Russia, viz. that her Majesty's fleets and ships shall and may lawfully seize all ships and goods belonging "to the enemy" or his subjects, and "bring the same to judgment" in the Courts of Admiralty. So that the order is not quite so barbarous as the worthy president would lead us to suppose; nor is it at all likely that the commanders of our vessels or fleets would resort to such a practice, so much against their own private interests, and which would deprive them, as captors, of all hope of prize money.

With regard to the armed vessels of the enemy, we presume that even the Manchester Chamber of Commerce would not object to an order commanding our naval officers, in the event of their non-submission, "to seize, burn, and destroy them;" nor could that be stigmatised as being issued in a spirit worthy of the most barbarous times.

But to return to the distinction said to be observed during hostilities with reference to private property on land and private property at sea. We by no means agree to the reasons for its origin given by the president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

The great authority of the Americans on international law—Wheaton—in discussing the right to capture the property of the enemy, begins by laying down the following proposition:—"From the moment one State is at war with another, it has, on general principles, a right to seize on all the enemy's property, of whatsoever kind and wheresoever found, and to appropriate the property thus taken to its own use, or to that of the captors." With this proposition we fully agree, and according to it a belligerent has the same power over the property of the enemy on land as at sea. The right, doubtless, over property on land has gradually been modified; but why? Not, we think, on grounds of morality, but because a belligerent, by insisting upon his extreme rights on land, would defeat in most cases his own objects. It is the interest of an army advancing through a hostile territory to obtain supplies in the shape of provisions from its inhabitants, shelter for itself, and freedom from attack by the non-military part of the population. An army, therefore, so long as its requisitions are complied with, and the inhabitants remain in the peaceful occupation of their former pursuits, does not in general interfere with private property.

Where, however, the whole population rises against an advancing army of a belligerent, he at once exercises his extreme rights—property is destroyed, forced contributions levied, and, in the case of resistance of towns to capture, they are given up to be sacked. Manning, an able English writer, gives another reason for the lenity shewn by belligerents towards private property on land, which is by no means without weight. "It probably had," he observes, "its origin in its being the interest of conquerors to attempt to reconcile a vanquished nation to a change of sovereignty, according to the maxim, as old as Machiavel, that men sooner forget the death of their father than the loss of their patrimony." Now, these considerations do not in general apply to captures at sea; the enemy's resources and his revenues are thereby crippled, and the resources of the capturing belligerent increased, without any countervailing disadvantages, such as we have before seen might attend the capture of private property on land. It is true, that by captures at sea losses may fall heavily upon individual members of the hostile State; but the question to be determined is, whether such captures are not necessary to secure the object of hostilities—the bringing of the war to a satisfactory conclusion. We consider that they are, and we hope that no considerations of the private interests of a class will be allowed to interfere with the public interests of the whole community. A class which can carry on commercial pursuits in time of war, without being subjected to any of its chances, may, if the profits should be then greater, not feel so great an inclination as at present to remain at peace, and, on both sides of the Atlantic, might look with indifference upon the prolongation of hostilities in which cotton in a raw and manufactured state would be equally safe.

PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I am glad to find this important subject is likely to engage the attention of persons competent to deal with it. It is high time that it should. No branch, I believe, of our commercial law stands more in need of the reformer's hand; indeed, it seems not improbable that, but for some speedy and extensive change, this difficulty will be found to solve itself, and patents of all kinds be swept away as public nuisances, before a storm of popular indignation.

What the actual evils are I leave your readers to gather from the masterly paper from the hand of Mr. Grove, transferred some week or two since to your columns. An International Patent Law has been more than once upon the tapis. It is easy to see that further elements of confusion will be introduced should such a law actually be carried out.

The grand source of all this mischief lies in the impossibility of ascertaining, in the vast majority of cases, what the rights of the patentee really are. To the bulk of the manufacturing community he speaks as a man having authority, albeit his specification may contain nothing new or useful; nay, although the description of his machine or process may be the result of the poorest speculation, and he may never even have contemplated taking a single step in the practical working of his invention. Several very cruel cases have come under my notice, in which unscrupulous patentees have levied black mail upon people in a small way of business. I have known others in which audacity has been equally successful with large manufacturers, who preferred making terms with any one who could be troublesome in the way of their trade, to contesting his claims in a court of law. This feature of impudence has been exaggerated to the dimensions of caricature in a case that appeared a week or two back in connexion with the uniform of the rifle corps.

The uncertainty I have already mentioned is only as to facts. This, of course, is common to the public and the Profession. Theoretically the difficulties are greater still, and the Profession appears, until very recently, to have been divided as to the nature of the subject-matter of the grant. In a treatise on this subject I endeavoured (I believe it was then attempted for the first time) to bring the matter within the compass of a short and single definition. I can hardly flatter myself that I have imbued the Profession with the idea; but this fact is incontestable, that almost all the recent decisions in patent cases have adopted it as a fundamental axiom.

Agreeing fully, therefore, with Mr. Grove, and your correspondent of last week, as to the expediency of a change, my opinion inclines to the belief, that, to be effectual, it must be applied in a different way from that proposed by either of them. There is really no legal question of any intricacy involved in the affair—none but what any man of average intelligence can comprehend and apply. I would propose a board of scientific persons, whose whole duty it should be to report upon inventions submitted to them, and to recommend for letters-patent such inventions only as in all probability, (and the thing is capable of calculation within very narrow limits), but for the applicant's exertions, would not have come into public use during the term of his patent right. Each such recommendation might be accompanied by suggestions as to particular exceptions, and other special conditions. Of this probability the board should be the sole and decisive judges. If there were a doubt, I would give the benefit to the public.

Patents thus granted would no doubt be few, but they would be proportionately prized. In fact, they would be almost incontestably diplomas of inventive merit, instead of what they are now in too many instances, instruments of juggling and chicanery.

Mr. Webster thinks the machinery at present at the disposal of the Crown sufficient to work under improved conditions. I doubt it. With the exception of Mr. B. Woodcroft, there is, I think, no one in connexion with the office of the Great Seal who pretends to any (even general) acquaintance with the details of manufacturing art. At present, active and public-spirited as that gentleman has proved himself, it is all that he and an intelligent staff can do to print, register, and reduce to something like official order the mass of specifications that are showered in upon him. Under the system I am advocating, we might have from the same hands a really valuable annual report on the general state and prospects of manufactures.

There remains the important question of the cost of the proposed change. A return to high office fees will not, of course, be entertained. A serious diminution will be made in the law officers' official income. A department hitherto self-supporting will have to figure in the estimates.

The question for the public is, is it worth what it will cost to alter it?

J. CORYTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes to reduce the stamp duty on agreements from 2s. 6d. to 6d. The present duty acts, no doubt, to a considerable extent, as a prohibition, and the reduction will probably not cause any great diminution in the produce of the stamp. There is, however, another stamp to which the same reasoning applies, viz. the common deed stamp, and I would suggest that application should be made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to reduce this also.

My experience tells me that the amount of the stamp, 1l. 15s., prevents the completion, in a legal and binding form, of a very considerable number of transactions. I would mention particularly declarations of trust, appointments, conveyances, and transfers where no money passes. Powers of attorney come within the same category.

A word from you might, perhaps, induce some influential members of the Profession to bring this matter to the notice of Mr. Gladstone, who has shewn himself very ready to accept suggestions.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Lincoln's-Inn.

122. Judicial notice to be taken of signature of officers. 12 Vict. c. 45, s. 114.
123. Special commissioners for receiving evidence. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 101.
124. Court may order the examination of persons in Scotland. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, s. 21.
125. Affidavits, &c. may be sworn in Ireland, Scotland, or the colonies, before any competent court or person. 13 Vict. c. 108, s. 24.
126. Circumstances under which company may be wound up voluntarily. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 102.
127. Whenever a company is wound up voluntarily, the company shall, from the date of the commencement of such winding up, cease to carry on its business, except in so far as may be required for the beneficial winding up thereof; and all transfers of shares, or alteration in the status of the members of the company, taking place after the commencement of such winding up, shall be void; but its corporate state and all its corporate powers shall, notwithstanding it is otherwise provided by its regulations, continue until the affairs of the company are wound up.
128. A resolution shall be deemed to be extraordinary whenever a resolution has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of the votes of such members of the company for the time being, entitled, according to the regulations of the company, to vote, as may be present, in person or by proxy, (in cases where, by the regulations of the company, proxies are allowed), at any meeting of which notice specifying the intention to propose such resolution has been duly given. At any such meeting, unless a poll is demanded by at least five members, a declaration of the chairman that the resolution has been carried shall be deemed conclusive evidence of the fact, without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the same. Notice of any meeting shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be duly given, and the meeting to be duly held, whenever such notice is given and meeting held in manner prescribed by the regulations of the company. In computing the majority under this section, reference shall be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled by the regulations of the company.
129. For the purpose of an extraordinary resolution, in default of any regulations as to voting, every member shall have one vote; and in default of any regulations as to summoning general meetings, a meeting shall be held to be duly summoned of which seven days' notice in writing has been served on every member in manner in which notices are required to be served by the third schedule hereto, or by any provisions that may be substituted for the provisions as to notices in the said schedule; and in default of any regulation as to the persons to summon meetings, five members shall be competent to summon the same; and in default of any regulations as to who is to be chairman of such meeting, it shall be competent for any person elected by the members present to preside.

130. Notice of resolution to wind up voluntarily. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 103.
131. Commencement of voluntary winding up. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 64.
132. Consequences of voluntary winding up. 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 104.
133. Effect of winding up on share capital of company limited by guarantee.
134. Power of company to delegate authority to appoint liquidators.
135. Any arrangement entered into between a company about to be wound up voluntarily, or in the course of being wound up voluntarily, and its creditors, shall be binding on the company, if sanctioned by an extraordinary resolution, and on the creditors, if acceded to by three-fourths in number and value of the creditors, subject to such right of appeal as is hereinafter mentioned.
136. Any creditor or contributory of a company that has in manner aforesaid entered into any arrangement with its creditors may, within three weeks from the date of the completion of such arrangement, appeal to the court, by petition, or in such other manner as the court directs, against such arrangement, and the court may thereupon, as it thinks just, amend, vary, or confirm the same.
137. Power for liquidators or contributories in voluntary winding up to apply to court. 22 Vict. c. 60, s. 14.
138. Power of liquidators to call general meeting. 21 Vict. c. 14, s. 19.
139. Power to fill up vacancy in liquidators. 22 Vict. c. 60, s. 15.
140. Power of court to appoint liquidators.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 3, 1860.

IN 1850 her Majesty issued a commission to "Sir John Jervis, A. G., Samuel Martin, Esq., Q. C., William Henry Walton, Esq., barrister-at-law, and one of the Masters of the Court of Exchequer, George William Bramwell, Esq., barrister-at-law, and James Shaw Willes, Esq., barrister-at-law," to inquire and ascertain whether any and what alterations and amendments could be made for the better administration of justice in "the Process, Practice, and System of Pleading in the Superior Courts of Common Law." A few months after the issuing of the commission, Sir John Jervis was promoted to the Chief Justiceship of the Common Pleas, and in his place was added Sir Alexander Cockburn*.

The first Report was presented in 1851, the second in 1853, and the third and final Report has just been presented and printed. The results of the first two Reports are well known to our readers: the Common-law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1854, together with important rules and forms, have produced a complete, simple, and admirable code, both of practice and of pleading at common law. The commissioners were thoroughly masters of their subject, and brought to their work not only full knowledge, but zeal and resolution.

* It should also be stated, that upon the resignation of Edward Lawes, Esq., barrister-at-law, in December, 1851, Henry Thurston Holland, Esq., barrister-at-law, was appointed secretary, and has filled that office to the present time.

With unsparing yet judicious hands they lopped off the excrescences of ages; and while others were talking of magnificent, but shadowy and impracticable, schemes of legal reform, they have shewn how much good may be effected by quiet sensible labour in the right direction. The benefits arising from their most valuable suggestions are being daily experienced by the public to an extent which can be appreciated only by those who are constantly present in the common-law courts; and after the test of seven years, we believe that there is not one of the amendments proposed by the commissioners, and carried out by the Legislature, which the public or the Profession would desire to see repealed.

The commissioners justly say, in their present Report, that at the time of the issuing of the commission in 1850—

"Much dissatisfaction prevailed among the practitioners and suitors. It was complained, and with justice, that the proceedings in actions, though undefended, of which the great majority of cases consists, were unnecessarily tedious and costly. It was also a subject of deep and just dissatisfaction that the time of the Courts was frequently occupied, and expense and delay occasioned, by frivolous arguments and discussions upon points merely of technical form, altogether irrelevant to the merits. Justice was frequently defeated, in trials at Nisi Prius, in consequence of variances between the pleadings and the evidence; or of objections to the stamp upon documents; or from want of authority to adjourn the trial when an unforeseen difficulty arose; or from other circumstances which occasionally, after very great trouble and expense had been incurred, rendered the trial wholly fruitless, and left the real question in controversy between the parties undecided."

And when reviewing the new system, of which they are the authors, they are enabled to say—

"As regards the amendments and alterations in the procedure in actions at law, we are happy to be able to report, that they have rendered the procedure simple, economical, and speedy, and have had the effect of limiting the costs to the expenses of the necessary and essential steps in a cause.

"The extent of the reform effected will be exemplified by the fact, that in nine months of the years 1852-3, (the first during which the new system was partially introduced), as compared with the same period in the preceding year, by the abolition of proceedings of a formal character, all involving considerable expense, reported by us to be unnecessary, and thereupon abrogated, the rules granted by the three Courts were during that time reduced in number from 38,009 to 3081, and this notwithstanding an increase in the number of writs issued.

"The technicalities which brought so much discredit on our jurisprudence have now disappeared, and the Courts, owing to the improved system of pleading and procedure, and the large additional power of amendment, are occupied in adjudicating upon the substantial merits of the cases in litigation, while, from the operation of the same causes, it very rarely occurs in trials at Nisi Prius that the real question in controversy is not decided by the jury."

Among the suggestions made in the present Report are the following:—

That, in order to avoid the difficulties which sometimes arise with respect to the joinder of parties to actions, plaintiffs should be allowed to bring their actions in the names of all the persons in whom the legal right may be supposed to exist, leaving it to the Court to give judgment in favour of the persons who may be found to be entitled.

That the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, ss. 63-68, should be extended to all cases of replevin, (in order to prevent any question as to the construction of those sections), and that a plaintiff in replevin should be at liberty to pay money into court in answer to an avowry.

That actions of dower, writ of right of dower, and quare impedit, should be commenced by writ of summons issuing out of the Court of Common Pleas, instead of by original writ out of Chancery, and that the proceedings therein should be assimilated to those in personal actions.

That in actions on bonds the defendant should be allowed to pay money into court; and also in detinue, by leave of the court or judge.

That in attaching debts the judge should have discretion to set off cross claims, and also to refuse to interfere where the costs of the proceedings would, in his opinion, bear so large a proportion to the amount to be recovered as to make the remedy practically worthless or vexatious. That the garnishee, if he bona fide doubts who is entitled to the debt, should be allowed to interplead.

That the statutes relating to costs should be revised and consolidated, retaining the leading principles which now regulate the right to costs; but that whenever a plaintiff in any action recovers less than 5*l.* damages, it should be in the discretion of the judge to allow or disallow his costs.

The learned commissioners invite renewed attention to their former observations respecting the constitution of juries, more especially that part which relates to securing the attendance on common juries of the class of persons who now serve exclusively on special juries, "with a view to the improvement of the former by the admixture of persons of higher education and intelligence." It is stated that the higher class are legally liable to serve on common juries, although not required to do so in practice.

The last and most important suggestion tends to the fusion of law and equity. In reviewing the partial legislative adoption of their Second Report with reference to this subject the commissioners say—"In a second branch of our Second Report we considered the necessity of enlarging and expanding the procedure of the common-law Courts, so as not only to invest them with powers previously exercised by Courts of equity alone, by way of assistance to the Courts of common law in the progress of an action, called 'auxiliary equity,' but also to enable them to exercise the powers of Courts of equity for the protection of legal, as distinguished from equitable, rights, and for the enforcing of legal obligations. We strongly urged that these powers should be conferred on the Courts of common law, on the ground that every Court ought to possess within itself the means of administering complete justice within the scope of its jurisdiction; and that the Courts of common law, to be able satisfactorily to administer justice, ought to possess, in all matters within their jurisdiction, the power to give all the redress necessary to protect and vindicate common-law rights, and to prevent wrongs, whether existing, or likely to happen unless prevented. . . . Effect was given to our recommendations as to conferring on the Courts of common law the powers previously exercised by the Courts of equity alone, as auxiliary to the Courts of law. But the Legislature abstained from enlarging the powers of the latter Courts, so as to enable them to protect common-law rights from threatened invasion, or to enforce the specific performance of common-law obligations."

Then come the suggestions themselves, which are of so much interest to our readers that we cannot do better than present them in the language of the learned commissioners:—

"We proceed to the second part of the subject, namely, the powers hitherto exercised by Courts of equity alone, which we have proposed should be conferred upon Courts of common law. The experience of the five years which have elapsed since the passing of the act of 1854 has strongly confirmed the views which we sought to enforce in our last Report; and we cannot but regret the partial manner in which our recommendations were carried into effect by the Legislature. Upon this subject, in addition to what we formerly urged, we beg to submit for consideration the following observations:—

“ Besides the exclusive jurisdiction which the Court of Chancery has from time to time acquired over subjects which either never were within the scope of the common law, or have ceased to be so from desuetude or express enactment, that Court has also exercised in various instances powers over subjects within the jurisdiction of the common-law Courts, either in aid of those Courts, as by discovery, or by way of prevention of a threatened injury, as by injunction against a wrong or against an apprehended unjust litigation, or by way of specific performance, or by way of restraint of the proceedings of the common-law Courts, where the prosecution of actions, and even the execution of judgments, have been stayed by injunction, upon the ground that there was something in the proceedings contrary to the law administered in the Court of Chancery, technically called ‘equity.’ We desire to call attention to the points in which the two jurisdictions at present thus interfere, and are dependant one upon the other.

“ With that part of the Chancery jurisdiction which deals with subjects not within the cognisance of the common-law Courts it is no part of our duty to deal, because it does not interfere with the jurisdiction or procedure of the common-law Courts as at present constituted. It is with that part of the Chancery jurisdiction which undertakes to aid the proceedings of common-law Courts, or to furnish a better remedy, or to control and restrain their proceedings, that we are concerned; because, in our opinion, the relation of the Courts to one another is, in respect of such jurisdiction, anomalous and absurd.

“ The auxiliary power of the Court of Chancery to compel discovery in aid of an action or defence in a common-law court has already, by the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, been conferred upon the Courts of common law. No practical difficulty has been experienced in the exercise of this jurisdiction. In cases where discovery must previously have been sought in the Court of Chancery it has, since the act of 1854, been speedily obtained at judges’ chambers at a comparatively trifling expense.

“ That part of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery which relates to protection against threatened and impending injury deals, to a great extent, with subjects which are within the general jurisdiction of the Courts of common law. It is founded upon the principle of giving a more complete remedy by restraining the commission of injuries, in respect of which the Courts of common law can only award damages. We proceed to consider this subject with reference to the various remedies in their order.

“ First, as to the power of restraining, by injunction, threatened and impending injuries. Upon this subject we have already, in our Second Report, stated at large the opinion of the former Common-law Commissioners and our own. Suffice it now to say, that, for the reasons there stated, Courts of common law ought equally to have power to protect legal rights from violation, and to give damages for actual injury. It often happens that both compensation in damages and protection are required in order to afford justice; and in such cases, where immediate protection is necessary, no complete remedy can at present be obtained, except by resorting to the Court of Chancery. This arises from the circumstance that there is no provision for issuing an injunction from a common-law court in case of threatened injury. It is necessary, as the law at present stands, to wait until a wrongful act has actually been commenced, so that an action for damages may be maintained, before application can be made for an injunction to a Court of common law, whereas the danger of such an injury is enough to found the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. This seems unreasonable, when it is considered that the right threatened to be violated exists at the common law, and that in case of actual injury redress is given in a common-law court, and not in the Court of Chancery, (unless it be incidentally under the act 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), and that after the wrong has actually commenced an injunction may be obtained in a common-law court against its repetition or continuance, or the committal of an injury of a like kind; and yet that, in case of threatened and impending injury to a similar right, it is necessary to resort to the Court of Chancery. This defect in the jurisdiction of the common-law Courts, which is the more striking when it is considered that the Court of Chancery often declines to interfere until after the right has been established at law, ought, we think, at once to be remedied. The reasons for doing so are shortly as follows:—The rights in respect of which the remedy proposed is to be given are recognised in courts of common law, which are instituted for the purpose of protecting and vindicating them: the complete enjoyment of such rights can only be obtained through the means of injunction, by which the violation of them is prohibited and prevented: damages in many cases afford but imperfect redress: in practice, the resort for protection by injunction to a court different from that in which the right, if in dispute, is, and ordinarily must be, tried and established, necessitates two suits, instead of one: lastly, to give the power to the common-law Courts in all cases of common-law rights will be to restore an ancient jurisdiction in an improved and more efficient form.

“ The procedure for this purpose may be at once simple and effective, namely, by application to the court or a judge for an injunction. If the case be such that the recovery of damages would be an inadequate or inconvenient remedy, the injunction may be ordered to issue forthwith ex parte, subject, of course, to an application by the opposite party to dissolve it. It should be in the discretion of the court or judge whether the injunction should issue in the first instance, or whether only a rule or summons to shew cause should be granted.

“ Upon motion to quash the injunction, or on the hearing of the rule or summons to issue it, the court or judge ought to have power either to decide the matter summarily, or to direct an action, or issue, or a special case, and to impose such terms as to keeping an account or otherwise, and to make such order as to the costs of the proceedings, as may be just.

“ This power ought to be conferred in all cases of common-law rights in which an injunction might be obtained in the Court of Chancery.

“ In an action involving the question of injunction, brought or continued under the direction of the court or a judge, it should not be necessary to claim an injunction in the declaration, unless directed by the judge; and in such an action not so brought the party injured ought to be at liberty, as at present, to claim an injunction, if he think proper. The provisions of the 82nd section of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854 ought to be modified, so as to be applicable to the new writ.

"The power of issuing injunctions by the common-law Courts is at present confined to actions in which some breach of contract or duty is complained of, and cannot be exercised for the protection of property the right to which is in litigation. It cannot, for instance, be exercised in the action of ejectment, even to prevent irreparable waste; nor in case of detainue, to prevent the defendant from making away with the goods which may be specifically recovered. This defect in the jurisdiction should be supplied by extending the power of issuing injunctions, so as to prevent injury to or the making away with property, in actions in which the title thereto is in dispute.

"Another measure of protection at present afforded by the Court of Chancery consists in ordering the delivering up of documents which, upon the face of them, appear sufficient to give the holder a right of action at common law, but which, by reason of circumstances which might be set up as a defence if an action were brought, ought not to be made available. In such a case, the danger that by lapse of time evidence of the defence may be lost, and so the instrument may be unjustly enforced, is considered as constituting a right in the party apparently charged by the instrument, unless disabled by some act of his own, to have it given up and cancelled, and so to have the claim set at rest. This power may well be given to the Courts of common law in respect of common-law claims and defences. And in cases in which only a part of the amount appearing to be due on the instrument is in fact due, an offer to pay such part, and a payment of the amount into court, to abide such order as the Court may make, ought to be considered equivalent to actual payment before proceedings. This may be done either by action or by summary application to the Court, as may be thought most advisable.

"Under the same head of protection against anticipated injury may be classed the proceedings in interpleader, which we now proceed to consider.

"The principle of interpleader is this—that a person having, without any fault on his part, the possession of property in which he claims no interest, and which is claimed by two or more adverse parties, whose alleged titles have a common origin, is entitled to be protected from the necessity of litigating the question of property in which he has no concern, upon giving up the subject-matter in dispute to be dealt with under the direction of the Court, which then determines the question in a proceeding between the adverse claimants. Before the stat. 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58, the remedy existed in the common-law courts in one form of proceeding only, namely, the action of detainue. One of the last instances, if not the last, in which it was resorted to, was in the case of Land v. Lord North, (4 Dougl. 266). The statute referred to, however, gave jurisdiction to the common-law Courts in cases of action brought by one of the claimants against the holder of the property. It also gave a new power to relieve sheriffs against the necessity of litigating adverse claims made to goods taken under an execution. In this latter case the Court of Chancery, before the statute, declined to exercise jurisdiction, for the alleged reason, that if the sheriff had made a wrongful seizure, he ought not to be relieved; while, if he had made a rightful one, there was no occasion for interfering. And it may be doubted whether that Court will assume jurisdiction since the statute. (See Tufton v. Harding, Dec. 21, 1859, before Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C.) The jurisdiction conferred upon the common-law Courts in such cases has proved highly beneficial. In some particulars, however, it requires extension and amendment.

"With respect to both kinds of interpleader proceedings, difficulties have arisen where the claim is at present capable of being enforced in the Court of Chancery only, and is called equitable. In respect to such claims Courts of common law have at present no jurisdiction, and the consequence has been, that great inconvenience has arisen in the execution of the Interpleader Act. To enable the Courts to do complete justice in such cases their jurisdiction ought to be extended to all claims, whether legal or equitable, where an action has been brought in respect of a common-law claim within the former branch of the statute, or there has been a seizure in execution within the latter. In case of interpleader for relief of sheriffs, jurisdiction ought to be given to the common-law Courts, even though the claim or claims be all equitable. The proceedings upon such a claim may be in the same form as those in the case of a conditional defence upon equitable grounds, which will be mentioned in a subsequent part of this Report.

"In interpleader, after action brought by one of the claimants, an amendment is also advisable. The course of decision upon the construction of this branch of the statute has usually followed that of the decisions in Chancery, which, amongst other exceptions to this jurisdiction, appear to have established, that relief will not be given when the titles of the claimants have not a common origin, but are adverse to and independent of one another. This exception, of which the alleged reason is not very obvious, has no place in interpleader proceedings for the relief of sheriffs, and we see no good reason for its existence in any case of interpleader in the common-law courts. To take the common case of a wharfinger or warehouseman seeking relief against adverse claimants, the applicant has, generally speaking, no information as to the nature of their alleged titles; and yet it is clearly just, that, whatever that may be, he ought not to be at the expense and risk of determining who is in the right, in a contest in which he has no interest whatsoever, except it be to hand over the property in dispute to the rightful owner. We recommend that interpleader should be allowed to all persons not falling within the class at present estopped from interpleading, whether the adverse claims have a common origin or not.

"Interpleader for the relief of sheriffs admits of further improvement. It often happens, that where a sheriff has seized goods in execution a claim is made to them under a bill of sale to secure an amount much less than the value of the goods, and the goods, if sold, would be sufficient to satisfy both the execution and the bill of sale creditor. In such cases great difficulty arises. The property of the goods is entirely out of the debtor, and in the bill of sale creditor. The former has a right to the goods upon paying off the bill of sale, and that right ought to be available to the execution creditor. The bill of sale creditor has a right to the possession of the goods for the purpose only of satisfying his debt; and he ought not, provided his own debt is first satisfied, to be allowed to stand in the way of the execution creditor, by objecting to a sale by the sheriff. There are other similar cases in which the claimant is entitled to the goods only to secure a debt. The judge ought to have power, in all cases where the right of the claimant is only by way of security for a debt, to direct a sale, and the application of the proceeds, in case of a surplus, to satisfy the execution, upon such terms, as to payment of the secured debt or not, and otherwise, as the judge may think fit.

"The jurisdiction in interpleader cases ought also to be extended in the following particular. It occasionally happens that the execution creditor and the claimant agree to leave the matter to the decision of the judge before whom the summons is heard, without requiring an issue. When points of law only are involved, this course saves expense and delay. Even where questions of fact are involved, now that the parties and their witnesses can be summoned and examined before the judge, it not unfrequently happens that the judge, by consent, disposes of the case. Sometimes, however, even in cases of small amount, one of the parties insists upon the trial of an issue, at a greater expense to both parties than the amount in dispute. In cases of this kind it is obviously for the advantage of all that the judge should have the power of deciding summarily, and so preventing needless expense. We think this power should be given to the judge, to be exercised if he thinks proper.

"We would further recommend, that in all cases where the question is one of law, the facts not being disputed, the judge should be at liberty to decide the question without an issue, and, if necessary, to direct a special case for the opinion of the Court.

"We pass on to the remedy of specific performance for enforcing the actual fulfilment of contracts, the breach of which cannot be compensated by mere damages. On this subject we have already, in our Second Report, (p. 42), expressed our opinion that it ought to be added to the powers of the common-law Courts, at least in all cases in which a breach of the contract can now be redressed in those courts by an action for damages, and we pointed out the form of proceeding in which such remedy could be administered. We will not repeat what we then stated to be our opinion upon this subject, but we think it right to say that that opinion remains unaltered.

"We next proceed to consider the interference of the Court of Chancery, upon equitable grounds, with the proceedings in common-law courts, as a subject to which particular attention ought to be directed. Notwithstanding recent legislation, the law is still imperfect, in not admitting, by way of defence to a common-law action, matter which is now ground only for application to the Court of Chancery to restrain the proceedings by injunction.

"In all actions at common law, whatever is ground for a perpetual injunction ought to be and is received as a defence, where the relief in Chancery would be unconditional; and in cases where such relief in the Court of Chancery would be conditional, the Courts of common law ought to have power to give, in a summary way, the same relief against actions pending therein. The first part of this recommendation has obtained the force of law by the 83rd and following sections of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, but subject to a condition, namely, 'provided that such a plea shall begin with the words, for defence on equitable grounds, or words to the like effect.' Considerable difference of opinion exists amongst us as to the propriety of requiring that a plea should be thus headed; but as we are not agreed upon this matter, we do not think it expedient to enter further upon it.

"The second part of the recommendation now under reconsideration has not been acted upon, and the consequence has been, that in many cases pleas founded upon matter which would, in the Court of Chancery, be ground for conditional relief, have necessarily been rejected by the common-law Courts, although they involved no difficulty which could not have been readily overcome by their ordinary procedure. The consequence is, that in such cases the defendant must either resort to the Court of Chancery, or submit to the judgment of the Court of law, though he is ready and willing to perform the conditions upon which, according to the rule of the Court of Chancery, he ought to be relieved from the effect of such judgment.

"Difficulties have been apprehended in raising such defences, because of the rigidity of the existing forms of pleading and judgment in the courts of common law, and from its having been supposed that no appeal could be made to lie against a decision founded upon a summary application. In truth, however, no such difficulty exists. An instance of a conditional equitable defence, given effect to by the proceedings in a common-law court, is presented by the proceedings in an action upon a mortgage to stay the action, and for a reconveyance upon payment of the debt and costs. The power of giving relief upon summary application, by rule or summons, may be coupled with a right to the unsuccessful party to appeal, by leave of the Court, within a limited time, upon giving security. The appeal might be in the form of a special case, stating the facts necessary to raise the question, as in appeals upon new trial motions, under the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854. This power of appeal, coupled with a discretionary power to direct issues or inquiries, and as to costs of the action and application, will enable the common-law Courts, in the great majority of cases, to dispose of such defences finally; whilst in cases in which any unforeseen difficulty may arise, though we do not anticipate any, a provision similar to the 86th section of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854 will enable the court or judge to reject the defence, 'in case it cannot be dealt with by a Court of law so as to do justice between the parties, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as to such court or judge may seem reasonable.'

"In these cases the summons or rule would be in the nature of a bill for relief; if a form of procedure analogous to a plea is preferred, there is no reason why it should not be adopted. In that case the judgment must be altered, and be made the same as the combined effect of a common-law judgment, and a decree on a bill for relief from it. On such a judgment, error or appeal may lie, as on other judgments.

"The action of ejectment is not included in our recommendations under this head, because the course of legislation on the subject of land has tended to maintain and strengthen the distinction between legal and equitable estates, and we cannot hope, under the form of an improvement in procedure, to change the system thus sanctioned.

"There is, however, in addition to the case mentioned in our Second Report of an outstanding trust term, a class of cases in which we think the Courts of common law might, with advantage, be authorised to receive defences, at present available only by proceedings in Chancery; we mean cases of relief against forfeitures.

"It often happens that contracts provide for a pecuniary penalty of large amount, in case of non-payment of a smaller sum, or non-performance of one or more stipulated acts, the omission of which occasions damage of less amount than the penalty. In such cases, at the common law, it was formerly competent for the stipulating party, in case of a breach of the contract, to demand and recover the whole amount of the penalty, without regard to the actual amount of damage sustained. In the Court of Chancery, however, unless it appeared that the amount represented the agreed damages for a breach of contract, technically called 'liquidated damages,' the sum stipulated to be paid was considered merely a security for the actual damages sustained; and where these admitted of calculation, that Court relieved against the penalty upon compensation being made for such damage. This jurisdiction has been given to Courts of common law, and the conflict between the two Courts put an end to, by the stats. 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 11, and 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 8. No more than the actual damage sustained can now be recovered, and the interference of the Court of Chancery is no longer necessary.

"Upon the same footing stands the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to relieve against forfeiture of leases for non-payment of rent, and in certain cases, since the stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, against breaches of covenants to insure.

"This jurisdiction has, in the case of non-payment of rent, been partially conferred upon Courts of common law by stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, ss. 2, 3, 4, and the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, ss. 210, 211, 212. We think that the jurisdiction of the Courts of common law should be extended in this direction, and that, in every case of ejectment brought for a forfeiture, these Courts should have, upon rule or summons, power to relieve in all cases in which relief can now be obtained by bill in Chancery.

"The legislation upon this subject will thus be rendered consistent.

"Another enactment is, however, necessary to give full effect to the reception of such defences by Courts of common law. It is, that a defendant shall not be permitted to proceed in the Court of Chancery for relief which he may obtain by plea or otherwise in the court in which the action is pending, unless after such defence has been rejected by the Court of common law expressly upon the ground that 'it cannot be dealt with there so as to do justice between the parties.' The course of decision upon this subject may be traced in the cases of Prothero v. Phelps, (before the Lords Justices, on the 22nd December, 1855); Wild v. Hillas, (before Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., on the 3rd December, 1858); Kingsford v. Swinford, (before the same judge, on the 31st January, 1859); and Gompertz v. Pooley, (before the same judge, on the 9th February, 1859). These cases seem to establish that in the present state of the law it is competent for a defendant, after allowing the action to proceed to its termination without availing himself of such a defence, to file a bill in Chancery founded upon the same matter, and, after a second investigation of the case, to nullify the judgment. This may be prevented, without introducing any novelty in principle, simply by requiring the defendant, upon the first opportunity, to put forward all that he intends to rely upon in answer to the action.

"The alleged jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to entertain bills, technically called 'bills for a new trial,' to restrain execution upon a verdict and judgment, after the time for moving for a new trial in the common-law courts has elapsed, ought also to be abolished, as tending to revive and continue a litigation already brought to a close in a court of competent jurisdiction. Courts of law have abundant authority to deal with cases of fraud upon the Court, and abuse of their proceedings. In other cases it is considered that the time allowed to prepare for trial, and to move for a new trial, gives the defeated litigant as much opportunity to bring forward the matter upon which he relies as is consistent with a speedy and efficient administration of justice. The protraction of litigation to a length bearing a large proportion to the ordinary period of life is all but equivalent to a denial of redress, and it operates with almost equal disadvantage to both the litigants. The cases in which such a jurisdiction may be applicable were always rare, and they have become more unlikely than ever to occur, since the parties to a suit may be examined for or against themselves. Bills for a new trial have, for the reasons stated, fallen into disrepute and desuetude; but as the jurisdiction is stated to exist, and is an anomaly in our jurisprudence, we think it ought to be abolished by express enactment.

"We have thus recommended that many powers exercised by the Court of Chancery should be given to the common-law Courts, and in doing so we have selected those only which seemed to us likely to be exercised there with advantage. It has not been our object to extend, for the mere sake of extending, the field in which the Courts have common jurisdiction, by giving to the common-law Courts powers which may be exercised with equal benefit in the Court of Chancery, but simply to prevent the necessity for a resort by either party to both Courts for the purpose of obtaining complete justice, where the Court of Chancery at present, in the case of common-law rights, gives, on the one hand, aid by way of discovery, or a more complete remedy, as by injunction and specific performance, or, on the other hand, restrains the proceedings in common-law courts because of the existence of an equitable defence. Indeed, it is obvious that our recommendations, instead of having a tendency to extend the common field of jurisdiction, suggest a contrary and more effectual mode of putting an end to the contest between Courts of common law and Chancery, by so distributing their jurisdiction as to render their interference with one another impossible. It is our intention and wish, that the result of what is proposed should be ingrafted upon and become part of the common law, and that the distinction between common law and Chancery law should be so far abolished. If, in addition to this, the Court of Chancery is prohibited from interfering in cases where common-law rights are thus rendered capable of complete vindication in the courts of common law, and in which, therefore, its interference will have become useless, the greater part, if not the whole, of the field of conflict will be done away with, by confining the operation of the courts respectively to subject-matters peculiar to each. Thoroughly to effect this it is necessary to confer upon common-law Courts power to give, in respect of rights there recognised, all the protection and redress which at present can be obtained in any jurisdiction, and it is upon this principle that we have acted in our suggestions. If they be carried into effect there will no longer be the spectacle of jurisdictions imperfect in themselves, and clashing with one another, but each Court will be armed in itself with exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter within its cognisance, and with full power to give all the protection and redress which the law at present affords by means of a plurality of suits. The conflict of jurisdiction will be done away with, because the occasion for it will no longer exist.

"We have only to add, that we have given our best attention to the question whether it is necessary to adopt the procedure of the Court of Chancery in cases where it is proposed to borrow from its remedies; and we have arrived at the conclusion, strengthened by an experience of the working of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, that the desired object can be attained as effectually, and with less expense, by means of the ordinary proceedings of the common-law Courts."

MACAULAY AND THE BAR.

"If we were to seek a rival to Macaulay in this peculiar province of clear and cogent reasoning from fact A to fact X, imparting to conjecture the force of truth, we should probably find him rather among lawyers than writers. In truth, the historian always retained, and to his great advantage, many of the mental habits, as well as many of the tastes and joyous recollections, of the Bar. He was at once the most Paleyan and the most forensic of historical inquirers. When he entered the arena of controversy, you might doubt whether he had donned his armour in the senate-house of Cambridge or the assize court of Lancaster. We may assume (as Coke assumed, lamentingly, of Bacon) that had he only stuck to the law he would have made a great lawyer. But it is open to doubt whether, as a judge, he would have done more of service by the marvellous lucidity with which he would have drawn out a series of circumstantial evidence before a jury, or more of harm by his tendency to force the various considerations attending a complicated case into conformity with his own too complete and too vivid ideal of that case."—The Cornhill Magazine for March, p. 259.

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.

THIS Society held its seventh general meeting of the session on Monday, the 20th ult., when Lord Brougham took the chair.

Mr. Edward Webster read a paper on the Registration of Titles to Land in South Australia, under the Colonial Act of July, 1858.

Mr. Edgar then read the report of the special committee on scientific evidence, and stated that the committee were not prepared to recommend any change in the existing mode of taking scientific evidence—at least, until some plan had been proposed which would work harmoniously with the rest of our legal system. They could not agree to any of the suggestions by scientific men which had been laid before them.

The Chairman observed, with regard to the difficulty adverted to in the report, of distinguishing the evidence of scientific men from that of others skilled witnesses, that any changes might be made to apply only to evidence relating to chemical and mechanical subjects; and with regard to assessors sitting along with the judge, to which the committee had objected, he suggested that the plan might be followed which is adopted in the Admiralty Court, where the judge was assisted, in cases depending on technical skill and experience in navigation, by masters of the Trinity House, but, although so assisted, gave his own independent judgment.

Mr. T. Webster moved that the report be received and printed. He thought the report extremely opportune, as it would tend to stop the agitation which had been attempted to be got up on the subject of which it treated, and to dispel the misconceptions which prevailed among scientific men. Many men, eminent in science and otherwise, had expressed great horror at the exhibition made by scientific men in the witness-box. But it ought to be considered that a great proportion of the evidence given by such witnesses was not evidence of fact, but evidence of opinion. In any particular case, the facts being given, there were classes of minds, some of which drew their inferences dealing with similarities, and others drew their inferences dealing with dissimilarities; and in scientific questions they had the same conflict of testimony, resulting from honest differences of opinion, as upon any other subject. Another point noticed in the report was, where the line was to be drawn between scientific evidence and the evidence of skilled witnesses. Men who speak to the quality of a commodity—cloth or wine, for instance—give evidence of opinion as much as scientific witnesses. Men, of whatever class, who are placed above their fellows, either by education or instinct, in any special matter in which their testimony is required, came within the category of scientific men. There was the same difficulty in every question where opinion was involved. They must investigate opinion, and how could they do that except by a system of examination, cross-examination, and re-examination? With regard to assessors, he did not think they could be added to a jury; in the Admiralty Court there was no jury. In cases, therefore, where they require an assessor, such as patent cases, they ought to get rid of the jury. Nothing could be more absurd or more unsatisfactory than the present mode of submitting questions of patent right to a jury. He did not know a case within his own experience in which, where a simple question of infringement arose, and the decision was left to the jury, they did not find an infringement had taken place.

Mr. Hastings seconded the motion, and in doing so expressed his approval of the plan of appointing assessors to the judge in those cases in which a jury might be dispensed with. A provision of that nature had been introduced into Lord John Russell's Bankruptcy Bill, and, he trusted, would become law. He would advert to one matter on which great laxity prevailed—as to the scientific evidence in criminal trials. It appeared that no adequate security was taken that the substances, or portions of the human frame, sent to a chemist for analysis were safely transmitted to him intact, so that there might be considerable doubt as to their identity, and some danger of their being tampered with. On the general question, he entirely agreed with the report, as to the impossibility of drawing any sound and available distinction between scientific and other evidence.

The motion was carried.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN COMMON LAW.

—The following gentlemen have been appointed London Commissioners for administering oaths in courts of common law:—Queen's Bench: Samuel Potter the elder, of No. 36, King-street, Cheap-side; and Charles Thomas Jenkinson, of No. 7, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.—Common Pleas: Samuel Potter the elder, of No. 36, King-street, Cheap-side; and Charles Thomas Jenkinson, of No. 7, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.—Exchequer: Samuel Potter the elder, of No. 36, King-street, Cheap-side.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

(LORD CHANCELLOR).

A Bill for the further Amendment of the Process, Practice, and Mode of Pleading in, and enlarging the Jurisdiction of, the Courts of Common Law.

Sect. 1. In all cases of threatened breach of contract or other injury of such a nature that an action at law for damages might be maintained for the same if committed, application may be made, either ex parte or by rule or summons, to the court or a judge for an injunction; and upon such application a writ of injunction may be ordered to issue forthwith, upon such terms, as to the duration of the writ, giving security, costs, and otherwise, as to the court or judge shall seem reasonable.

2. Any order for injunction, or any writ issued by virtue thereof, may be discharged or varied by the court.

3. Injunction may be ordered to issue at once, or on rule or summons.

4. Upon any application to discharge &c. order for injunction, or any writ issued by virtue of such order, and upon the hearing of any rule or summons to shew cause why a writ should not issue, the court or judge shall have power either to decide the matter summarily, or to direct a special case to be stated or an issue to be tried, in such manner and upon such terms as they or he shall think fit, and generally to impose such terms and make such orders as to the duration of the writ, keeping an account, giving security, undertaking to pay damages in case the injunction should ultimately fail, costs of the proceedings, or otherwise, as to such court or judge shall seem reasonable and just.

5. In any such action directed by the court it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to claim an injunction in the declaration, unless so ordered.

6. In case of disobedience to any writ of injunction, the same may be enforced by attachment.

7. Writs of injunction against a corporation may be enforced either by attachment against the directors or other officers thereof, or by writ of sequestration against their property and effects.

8. No proceeding under this act shall be defeated by proof that the wrongful act has been committed or begun; and it shall be in the discretion of the court in such case to direct a writ claiming an injunction to be issued.

9. In ejectment, and all other actions and civil proceedings in any of the superior courts in which it is sought to recover land or goods, the plaintiff may, at any time after the commencement thereof, and whether before or after judgment, apply to the court for an injunction to restrain the defendant from injuring or making away with such land or goods.

10. Where the defendant in an action or civil proceeding would be entitled to obtain conditional relief in the Court of Chancery against further proceedings in such action, or upon a judgment obtained therein, he may apply summarily to the court in which the proceedings are, or to a judge, for such relief, who may, by rule or order, grant such relief against the action, or proceedings, or judgment therein, upon such terms and conditions as to the costs of the application and otherwise as shall be just.

11. The defendant in any cause may set up, by motion or summons in the nature of an audita querela, any matters arising after judgment for which he might have obtained relief, absolute or conditional, in the Court of Chancery, against such judgment.

12. The court may reject application for relief.

13. The court may direct a special case to be stated for the opinion of the court, or an issue or reference to such person or persons as the parties may agree upon, or to the master, upon such terms as they shall think reasonable.

14. Power to appeal from order of court.

15. The courts of error to be courts of appeal.

16. No appeal to be allowed unless notice be given in writing to the opposite party or his attorney, and to one of the masters of the court, within four days after the decision complained of, or such further time as may be allowed by the court.

17. Notice of appeal to be a stay of execution, provided bail to pay the sum demanded and costs be given.

18. The form of the appeal.

19. The court of appeal to give such judgment as ought to have been given in the court below, with power to remit the cause, with such directions as they shall think proper.

20. The court of appeal shall have power to adjudge payment of costs, and to order restitution.

21. In the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture brought for non-payment of rent, the court shall have power, upon rule or summons, to give relief in a summary manner, subject to appeal.

22. In the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture for breach of a covenant or condition to insure against loss or damage by fire, the court shall have power, upon rule or summons, to give relief in a summary manner, subject to appeal, in all cases in which such relief may now be obtained in the Court of Chancery under the provisions of the stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

23. Minute of relief granted to be made on the lease.

24. In any case where a person holds a document which upon the face of it appears to give a right of action at common law, but which, by reason of circumstances which would constitute a defence if an action were brought, ought not to be made available, the party apparently charged by or liable upon such document may commence an action to have the document delivered up and cancelled; and in such action the court or judge may, in all cases where the Court of Chancery would order such document to be given up and cancelled, order that execution shall issue for the delivery up to the plaintiff of such document; and that, if the said document cannot be found, and unless the court or a judge should otherwise order, the sheriff shall distrain the defendant by all his land and chattels in the said sheriff's bailiwick till the defendant render such chattel: provided that the plaintiff in such action shall, either by the same or a separate writ of execution, be entitled to levy the costs in such action.

25. A contempt of court to injure or part with the possession of any document after notice of action.

26. Form of the writ.

27. Form of the declaration.

28. If in any such case a part of the amount appearing to be due upon such document is really due from the person claiming to have it delivered up to him, an offer to pay such amount may be made to the defendant before action commenced; and it may be stated in the declaration, that such offer has been made to and refused by the defendant; and such amount may be paid into court, to abide such order as the court may make; and such statement and payment into court shall be considered equivalent to actual payment of such amount before action brought.

29. The provisions of the Common-law Procedure Acts, 1852 and 1854, to apply to the pleadings and proceedings in such action for the delivery up of documents.

30. Relief obtainable at law not to be applied for in Chancery.

31. Power to a court to stay proceedings in Chancery.

And with respect to Interpleader proceedings:—

32. Interpleader allowed in case of equitable claims.

33. An equitable claim may be set up in action or feigned issue.

34. Power to court to adjust equitable claims.

35. Interpleader may be granted, though the titles of the claimants to the money, goods, or chattels in question, or to the proceeds or value thereof, have not a common origin, but are adverse to and independent of one another.

36. Court may direct sale of goods seized in execution.

37. Upon the hearing of any rule or order calling upon persons to appear and state the nature and particulars of their claims, it shall be lawful for the court, wherever, from the smallness of the amount in dispute or of the value of the goods seized, it shall appear desirable so to do, at the request of either party, to dispose of the merits of the respective claims of such parties, and to determine the same in a summary manner.

38. A special case may be stated where facts undisputed.

39. The proceedings upon such case shall, as nearly as may be, be the same as upon a special case stated under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and error may be brought upon a judgment upon such case; and the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, as to bringing error upon a special case, shall apply to the proceedings in error upon a special case under this act.

40. The judgment in any such action or issue as may be directed in any interpleader proceedings, and the decision of the judge in a summary manner, shall be final and conclusive against the parties, and all persons claiming under them.

41. All rules, orders, matters, and decisions in interpleader proceedings, excepting affidavits, may, together with the declaration in the cause, if any, be entered of record, and made evidence.

With regard to certain points of procedure and practice:—

42. The joinder of too many plaintiffs shall not be fatal, but every action may be brought in the name of all the persons in whom the legal right may be supposed to exist; and judgment may be given in favour of the plaintiffs by whom the action is brought, or of one or more of them; or, in case of any question of misjoinder being raised, then in favour of such one or more of them as shall be adjudged by the court to be entitled to recover: provided always, that the defendant, though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs, occasioned by joining any person or persons in whose favour judgment is not given, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge.

43. The defendant to have benefit of set-off, though some plaintiffs improperly joined.

44. No other action shall be brought against the defendant for the same cause.

45. Provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, as to replevin, to apply to all cases of replevin.

46. The plaintiff in replevin may, in answer to an avowry, pay money into court in satisfaction.

47. Such payment into court in replevin shall not, nor the acceptance thereof by the defendant, work a forfeiture of the replevin bond.

48. In any action brought upon a bond, which has a condition or defeasance to make void the same upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, with a penalty, and in any action for detaining the goods of the plaintiff, it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court, to pay into court a sum of money to answer the claim of the plaintiff in respect of such bond in the former case, and, in the latter case, to the value of the goods alleged to be detained; and such payment into court shall be made and pleaded in like manner, and according to the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852; and the like proceedings may be had and taken thereupon as to costs and otherwise.

49. Dower, writ of right of dower, and quare impedit, to be commenced by writ of summons issuing out of the Court of Common Pleas.

50. Writ, and all proceedings thereon, to be the same as in ordinary actions.

51. In proceedings to obtain an attachment of debts under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, the judge may, in his discretion, refuse to interfere, where, from the smallness of the amount to be recovered, or of the debt sought to be attached, or otherwise, the remedy would be worthless or vexatious.

52. Whenever, in proceedings to obtain such attachment, it is suggested by the garnishee that the debt sought to be attached belongs to some third person who has a lien or charge upon it, the judge may order such third person to appear before him, and state the particulars of his claim.

53. The judge may bar the claim of third persons.

54. The provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, so far as they are applicable, shall apply to any order, &c. made in pursuance of this act.

55. Costs of writs of mandamus and injunction may be included in writs.

56. Costs not recoverable in action for injury where verdict less than 5*l.*, unless judge certifies.

57. The 87th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, to be repealed; and court may, upon summary application, by rule or order, exercise the same jurisdiction as the Court of Chancery under the 9th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

58. Power of judge to amend proceedings.

59. General rules may be made by judges.

60. New forms of writs and other proceedings may be adopted, as judges may think right.

61. Interpretation clause.

62. Provisions extended to Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham.

63. Provisions as to masters to apply to the prothonotaries of palatine courts.

64. As to proceedings in appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench, being the court of error from the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham, shall also be the court of appeal from the said respective courts for the purposes of this act.

65. Provision as to commencement of act.

66. Her Majesty, by an Order in Council, may direct all or any part of the provisions of this act to extend to any court of record in England and Wales.

67. Act to be cited as "The Common-law Procedure Act, 1860."

68. Act not to extend to Ireland or Scotland.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 10, 1860.

THE duties of an official liquidator to a company in course of being wound up under the provisions of the Joint-stock Acts are of a most serious and responsible nature, and it may not be altogether uninteresting to the legal reader to be furnished with a brief epitome of his powers and functions.

The Joint-stock Companies Act, 1856, provided that, for the purpose of conducting the proceedings in winding up a company, one or more persons, styled “official liquidators,” should be appointed. They were empowered to take into their possession all the property and effects of the company; to bring actions; to carry on the business of the company, so far as might be necessary for its beneficial winding up; to sell the real and personal property by public auction or private contract; to execute all deeds, receipts, and other documents; to refer disputes; to prove claims, &c. in the matter of the bankruptcy or sequestration of any contributory, for any balance against the estate of such contributory; to draw, accept, make, and indorse bills of exchange and promissory notes, &c.

The act, moreover, empowered them to appoint a solicitor or law agent, with the approval of the Court, together with such clerks and officers as should be considered necessary. The remuneration of the liquidator was to be by way of per-centage, or in such other manner as the Court might direct. (See sects. 88 to 92 of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47).

The Joint-stock Companies Amendment Act, 1857, contained various clauses increasing the authority of official liquidators. The 17th clause provided, that when a company was being wound up voluntarily, and the whole or a portion of its property was to be sold to another company, the liquidators might, with the sanction of the company by whom they were appointed, receive shares in such other company for the purpose of distribution amongst the shareholders of the company being wound up. This act also subjected the liquidators to a penalty not exceeding 5l. for every day during which they should make default in reporting to the registrar the decree declaring the company to be dissolved, in conformity with the 93rd section of the Joint-stock Act, 1856; and also enacted, that if the liquidators had in their hands, at the expiration of twelve months from the date of the dissolution of any company that had been wound up, any money or other property which they had been unable to distribute, owing to the death or absence of the parties, they were to be deemed to be trustees of such property within the meaning of the Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees. (11 Vict. c. 96).

The 19th section of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1858, repealed one of the clauses in the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1857, (and which has not been noticed in the above remarks, as the reader will prefer the substituted for the repealed section). The effect of the substituted section is, that the liquidators may compromise all calls, claims, and liabilities, whether present or future, and give complete discharges in respect of all or any of such calls, debts, or liabilities, subject to this proviso—first, that where a company is being wound up compulsorily, or where an order is made for the continuance of a voluntary winding up, no such compromise can be made, except in accordance with the directions of the Court, after notice to the creditors; and, secondly, that where a company is being wound up altogether voluntarily, no such compromise can be made without the sanction of a special resolution of the company.

The 3rd section of the Amendment Act, 1858, enables the Court to appoint additional liquidators in certain cases. Another clause empowers the Court, where a company is being wound up compulsorily, to order that the liquidators may exercise any specified power without the intervention of the Court. It is also provided, in subsequent clauses, that the liquidators may, with the sanction of the Court, at any stage of the winding up, pay any classes of creditors in full, and that they may invest monies for the time being in their hands in Government securities, including Exchequer bills.

Should it appear that any existing director, public officer, or member of a company in course of being wound up, has been guilty of any offence in relation to the company, for which he is criminally responsible, the Court may direct the official liquidators to institute and conduct a prosecution for such offence, and order the costs to be paid out of the assets of the company.

It was decided in Clark's case, (4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 800; 30 Law T. 174), that where a company is being wound up, and the plaintiff has brought an action against the directors, he is entitled, as of right, at common law, to inspect the books and papers in the hands of the official liquidator. It has been held, in the recent case of The Northumberland and Durham Banking Company, (4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 419; 27 L. J., Ch., 354; 6 Weekly Rep. 315), that it is not necessary that the liquidators should be accountants, or persons unconnected with shareholders.

In another case (In re The Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Company, Limited, 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 922; 33 Law T. 360) it was held, that the official liquidator appointed by the major part in number and value of the contributories, under the 88th section of the Joint-stock Companies Act, 1858, should give security; but the Court refused to order the official liquidator appointed by the Court to give security, as he had already done so as official assignee, and as an officer of the court.

As to substitution of the official liquidator as plaintiff in proceedings instituted by the company before the winding-up order, see Caldwell v. Ernest, (5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 667; 28 L. J., Ch., 810).

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

THE question of a court of appeal in criminal cases is just one of those questions in which theory is all on one side, and many practical difficulties, almost if not quite insuperable, are on the other. It is anomalous that a new trial should be attainable in an action involving an amount of 20*l.*, and not be allowed in cases involving liberty, reputation, life, and death. It is not satisfactory that there should be no inquiry into the merits or demerits of conviction for a crime, except such inquiry as a Secretary of State may choose to make. But what then? If the thing is impracticable, or can be attained only with such injury to the administration of justice as to outweigh all the advantages which can be anticipated, we must put up with anomalies, and be contented with that which in theory is imperfect and unsatisfactory.

When the subject was lately brought by Mr. McMahon before the House of Commons, Sir George Cornwall Lewis skilfully summed up the difficulties in the way of establishing a court of appeal in criminal cases. After shewing that the opinions of the majority of our judges were opposed to it, and that the practice of the civilised world went generally against it, he proceeds to the difficulties of which we have spoken, and to the reasons against the proposed alteration; and this part of his speech we give at length, as it cannot fail to possess a permanent interest for lawyers:—

Before the committee of 1848 Lord Deaman said—"What I would state, in one word, as my objection to the general power, is, that there would be no antagonism; there are no adverse parties, as in civil cases." And that principle is explained somewhat more fully in the letter of Mr. Baron Rolfe, now Lord Cranworth:—"With respect to the inexpediency of any right of appeal in criminal cases, I beg leave to add, in addition to what has been stated by Baron Parke, that a new trial would very rarely indeed be practicable. In civil cases the plaintiff has a direct personal interest in the result of his cause, and when a verdict obtained by him is set aside, and a new trial is ordered, he is obliged, in order to gain the object of his suit, and save himself from the obligation of paying the defendant his costs, to take proper steps for bringing all necessary witnesses to a second trial. But this is not the case in criminal prosecutions; a large proportion of prosecutors come forward only because they are bound to do so; the whole proceeding is rather a burthen imposed on the prosecutor, than a measure which he voluntarily adopts for the sake of personal redress; and I conceive that in nine cases out of ten when a new trial is ordered there would be so much difficulty in getting the prosecutor and witnesses together that no second trial could efficiently take place."

It may be urged, however, that while there is some ground for the distinction between the two classes of cases, there is still a great practical grievance to be remedied. Will any gentleman present take upon himself to affirm the frequency of wrong convictions by juries in criminal cases? If not, the whole groundwork of the proposed measure fails. I will quote the views of one or two eminent legal authorities on this point.

Baron Parke, now Lord Wensleydale, when examined before the committee, said—"I think that the complaints of the present mode of administering the criminal law have little foundation, for the cases in which the innocent are improperly convicted are extremely rare. Some, no doubt, there are; and I consider it is impossible in any human system of administering justice to avoid such misfortunes occasionally. There are many cases in which the guilty escape, but very few in which the innocent are punished; and having now had more experience upon the bench in the administration of criminal justice than any other judge, I can say for myself that I can hardly call to my recollection any case with which I am personally acquainted in which I think that a person really innocent has been convicted by the jury."

Lord Deaman expressed a similar opinion—"Juries are extremely unwilling to fall into the error of wrongly convicting. I believe there are a great many very wrong acquittals, and even conscientiously sometimes, from good motives and very respectable feelings, but unfortunately contradicting the truth, and bringing the administration of justice into some contempt, and giving impunity to great offenders."

Lord Brougham coincides in that view. "My impression and belief," he said, "most undoubtedly is, that there are very rare occasions indeed on which there is a wrong conviction."

Justice Wightman said—"As far as my experience goes, I entirely concur with Baron Parke in thinking that the conviction of a really innocent person is so rare that there is practically no sufficient necessity for applying a remedy which would be attended with such obvious impediments to the due course of criminal justice."

The weight of evidence is, therefore, in favour of the belief that wrong verdicts in criminal cases, at least when they are against the prisoner, are of rare occurrence. But if a wrong verdict is given, and the judge is dissatisfied with it, what is the almost universal result? It is, that the judge communicates his dissatisfaction to the Home Secretary; and I find it stated by Baron Parke, and assented to by Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Brougham, that such a report is universally acted upon. I maintain, therefore, that no proof of any practical and substantial grievance has been brought before the House, and that none really exists. The hon. and learned member referred to the case of Smethurst as an illustration of the necessity for a measure such as he has introduced; but I must say I entirely differ from him as to that case affording any ground whatever for the adoption of criminal appeals. The case was a difficult one undoubtedly, and it was my duty to give the closest attention to it, and do my best to master its details; but I cannot discern in the circumstances of that case any argument whatever in favour of a Court of Appeal. I think I may say with the utmost confidence, that had application been made, under the terms of this bill, within the first four days of the term after last August, for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection by the judge, it would necessarily have failed. The case, I believe, was directed to the jury with perfect legal propriety; nor could an application for a new trial have been entertained upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. My advice to her Majesty to grant a pardon was entirely founded on medical considerations. There was scarcely any dispute as to the medical facts brought out in evidence, but the question turned on the medical inferences to be deduced from them; and it was upon the opinion of eminent medical practitioners as to the bearing of these facts that I rested my advice. Medical science with regard to poisons is, unfortunately, in a somewhat imperfect and uncertain state; and the same imperfection and uncertainty are necessarily communicated to the legal questions with which they are connected. You might grant appeal after appeal, and have examinations before all sorts of courts, and you would never get over the fundamental uncertainty which arises from the present imperfect state of medical science. . . . .

I wish now to shew some of the probable consequences with which the bill is pregnant, in the event of its being passed. These are, first, the delay and uncertainty which it would import into the administration of criminal law. It is a maxim laid down by all writers on criminal jurisprudence, that punishment is effectual in proportion as it is speedy and certain; and the result of the proposed measure would therefore be to deprive the administration of the criminal law of much of its effect.

Upon this point Lord Brougham said before the committee of 1848—"The criminal law depends for the effect, more or less, which it has in deterring from crime by example of punishment, upon the speediness with which execution of the sentence follows trial. But in this case you would have a prisoner found guilty at York in the first fortnight in July, but no sentence, even in the most flagrant case of murder, ever could be executed till the middle of November following. For certainly in every case of capital conviction, and I believe in every serious case, the moving for a new trial would be a matter of course." Another important feature in the question is the expense which the multiplication of trials, and the necessary addition to the number of judges, would cause. Lord Brougham gave the following opinion as to the probable additions to the Bench that would be required in the event of criminal appeals being established:—"Another thing is this—for the present number of judges to do it would be utterly impossible; and then you come to the great difficulty of materially increasing the number of the judges. Supposing the Bar could furnish the increased number, which is perhaps doubtful; but supposing it could furnish six more judges to be added to the present fifteen, I beg to know how those judges could be kept up to the mark for their business." I do not suppose, of course, that the hon. and learned gentleman, or any member of this House, would be influenced by the prospect of business at the bar being increased by the adoption of appeals; but no less competent an authority than Lord Denman suggested that as a reason for the popularity of the proposal. His Lordship said—"I think there is another reason for the outcry, which is a great desire, I think, on the part of many active and able persons attached to the law, to see a new court and a new course of practice, which would be popular and striking, and give a new scope for the display of their talents."

CHITTY'S COLLECTION of STATUTES of PRACTICAL UTILITY. With Notes thereon. Intended as a Circuit and Court Companion. The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

* In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed.

* The Supplements of 1854 to 1857 inclusive, with a General Index to the whole, can be had done up in one volume, cloth boards, (uniform with Chitty's Statutes), price 11. 16s. 6d.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future Insurers EIGHTY PER CENT. of the PROFITS, with Quinquennial Division, or a low Rate of Premium without participation of Profits.

The next Division of Profits will be declared in June, 1860, when all Participating Policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1859, will be allowed to share in the Profits.

At the Five Divisions of Profits made by this Company, the total Reversionary Bonuses added to the Policies have exceeded 913,000l.

At the last valuation, at Christmas, 1854, the Assurances in force amounted to upwards of 4,240,000l., the Income from the Life Branch in 1854 was more than 200,000l., and the Life Assurance Fund, after division of Profits, (independent of the Guarantee Capital), exceeded 1,540,000l.

LOCAL MILITIA AND VOLUNTEER CORPS.—No extra premium is required for service therein.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their Lives at the Tabular Premiums may have their Lives insured at Extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such Policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written Notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for Policy Stamps.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that Fire Policies which expire at Lady-day must be renewed within fifteen days at this Office, or with Mr. SAMS, No. 1, St. James's-street, corner of Pall-mall; or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom; otherwise they become void.

Losses caused by Explosion of Gas are admitted by this Company.

CURE of a FOURTEEN YEARS' ASTHMATIC COUGH by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"I, Thomas Carter, Egremont, Cheshire, had an asthmatic cough for fourteen years; nothing ever gave me relief until I commenced taking Dr. Locock's Pulmonic Wafers, three boxes of which have entirely cured me. THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 17, 1860.

THERE is no class in the community which is more deserving of our commiseration, or whose peculiar situation more demands our care and attention, than those unfortunate beings who, afflicted with insanity or mental infirmity, are unable to take care either of themselves or of their property.

In former times, not far distant, the treatment of lunatics was most disgraceful; chains and the lash were applied as a punishment for the results of mental aberration, and those who, under a different treatment, might have been restored to the use of their reason, were rendered hopeless lunatics or raving madmen. So little, indeed, were the feelings of these unfortunate beings regarded, that they were exhibited as a public show, and people went to gaze at the inmates of Bedlam in the same manner, and with much the same motives, as they would view a menagerie of wild beasts.

Thanks, however, to those philanthropists who, after much labour, and after being often foiled, induced a healthier state of public feeling, and an entirely different mode of practice in the treatment of the insane. Kind attentions, and, as far as is consistent with safety, personal freedom, have been substituted for harshness, cruelty, and mechanical restraint. The result is, that in many cases the patient recovers, who, under the old mode of treatment, would in time have become hopelessly insane, and in most cases—at any rate where the new system of treatment is fairly carried out—the lunatic enjoys as great a degree of comfort as his unhappy situation is capable of.

Still, even in these times, in order to guard against obvious abuses, considerable and continual vigilance is required on the part of those whose duty it is to superintend the operation of our lunacy laws, and the regulations laid down by them. Relatives of alleged lunatics are not in all cases indifferent to a reversionary interest in their property; and those who have establishments for their reception are not altogether disinterested, and in some cases may regard their own profits almost as much as the welfare and recovery of their patients.

It becomes, therefore, a matter of the highest importance, in the first place, that no person should be unduly placed or kept in restraint; and in the second place, that, while properly kept in restraint, they should be treated in such a manner as will most conduce to their comfort and ultimate recovery. Above all things, it becomes especially the duty of the State to take care of those amongst the poor who are unfortunately insane—of those, in fact, whom the law terms "pauper lunatics." Their relations or friends, should they have any, are rarely able, even if willing, properly to care for or maintain them; and the evils of allowing them to go roving about the country, or to be placed in workhouses, where they will seldom, if ever, meet with the treatment their peculiar cases demand, are obvious to all who consider the subject.

The law for the protection of the sane from imprisonment on an ignorant or malicious charge of insanity, and the law for the care and treatment of the insane inhabitants of this country, are once more the important subjects of an inquiry by a select committee of the House of Commons. To this fact we would call public attention; for although a vast progressive reform has taken place in these laws during the last thirty years, no thinking person will deny that there is yet room for amendment in that quarter, and that great vigilance is still necessary to prevent a relapse into the frightful abuses of past days.

From the evidence taken last year before a committee of the House of Commons we gather that our insane pauper population loudly demands attention; that there is also a lack of proper provision for the wants of the lunatic of that large class of our fellow-countrymen who cannot meet the expenses of a private asylum; but that in other respects a more efficient execution of the laws in force, rather than any reform of the laws themselves, is necessary. Although an act of Parliament, which passed in the year 1853, enacted that every county and borough not having an asylum should, within a period long since expired, provide for its insane poor, either by contract for their board and lodging in an asylum or hospital, or by erection, separately, or jointly with another county or borough, of an asylum, yet it is a fact that several counties, and many boroughs, have ever since neglected to obey the law, and that there now exists scattered over the country a crowd of insane, helpless beings, who, but for such neglect, might have been at this moment in the full enjoyment of their reason. There is no justification for this disobedience of the law of the land; but, of course, many are the excuses given by the county and borough magistrates to whom the disobedience is charged. A different complexion may, doubtless, be given to the case in the course of the inquiry now pending; but at present a jealousy of interference between the county and borough magistrates, added to a niggardly and short-sighted financial policy, looks like the beginning and end of the difficulty.

Where it is inexpedient that a borough, on account of its scanty population, should have a separate asylum, we see no good reason why the reception of its insane poor into the adjoining county asylum should not be compulsory, the terms of such reception being regulated, if the county and borough magistrates differed, by the Commissioners in Lunacy or the Home Office. Of course many boroughs can afford, and should be compelled, to provide their own separate asylums. Under no plea should the insane pauper be admissible into a workhouse. Of no disorder can it be affirmed more positively than of insanity, "vires acquirit eundo;" and yet, to save a little present outlay at the price of a future permanent tax, it is the practice of our magistracy to detain, in places alike unsuited for their cure or detention, and at a period when their malady is most curable, the pauper victims of that disorder. Hitherto it has been left to the magistrates, the overseers of the poor, and the parish doctors, to determine on the probability of a pauper's recovery from a disorder of which they collectively and individually know nothing, and by their fiat to shut the door of recovery. We hope to see this state of things altered. All insane paupers, chronic and others, should go to the county or borough asylum, and in the early stage of their disorder; there they all should remain, classified doubtless by the medical superintendents, until their cure or death. To remit chronic cases from the asylums to the workhouses, or their poor relatives, seems highly objectionable, fraught with misery to the patients and danger to the public. We see not why the cost of maintaining lunatic patients in an asylum should be higher than that of keeping the same patients in a workhouse, assuming that in both establishments the proper care and treatment is adhered to; and we see more chances at least of recovery in the quiet discipline of an asylum, and the constant supervision of its medical superintendent, than in the noisy freedom of a workhouse, and the casual visits of a general medical practitioner. The question of erecting asylums to any extent, at the public cost, for the reception of persons other than paupers, opens out a large field for discussion; and of course there is much to be said for and against their erection. This subject, we are inclined to think, should be further ventilated: the evidence already collected scarcely yet justifies a judgment one way or the other. In regard to the number of single patients unknown to, and therefore not visited by, the Commissioners in Lunacy, we venture to think that one prosecution, for the offence of their reception without certificate or notice to the commissioners, would alarm the delinquents, and rectify the evil. As to the management of the persons and property of lunatics found so by inquisition, we really see no great cause of complaint: the visitors in lunacy should certainly visit more frequently; but the Lord Chancellor, or the board of directors, can now give the necessary directions on that head, and he or they should do so. The average cost of an inquisition (75*l*.) does not sound extravagantly high, nor does the present scale of per-centage payments for the administration in lunacy. The alleged Lunatics' Friend Society were heard through their chairman and secretary last year, by the committee, but their complaints were somewhat far-fetched and trivial. We feel disposed, however, to agree with the secretary in his remarks on the total unfitness of a practising solicitor for the office of registrar in lunacy. The integrity and ability of the present registrar is not doubted, but no loophole should be left for suspicion. His position, we think, should be permanent, and he should be debarred from practice, directly or indirectly, in like manner as the registrars of the Court of Chancery. The erection of a State asylum for criminal lunatics we hail as a step in the right direction; the policy of ever discharging criminal lunatics is another matter, and, to say the least, doubtful.

To conclude: our system of lunacy mainly depends, we believe, for its efficacy, on the commissioners, masters, visitors, and other officials in lunacy. Much power and a large discretion must inevitably be lodged in their hands; but in proportion to the duty so must be the responsibility in this department. Least of all can we afford to pay servants incapacitated by years, or from any cause whatever, deficient in mental or physical energy. Harmony in action leads to success, but, as Englishmen, we are also taught to believe that the friction of independent opinions is likewise beneficial. When, therefore, we read in the minutes of Lord Shaftesbury's evidence "that the Lunacy Commission has subsisted for thirty years, and never had but one division," and that the commissioners gathered round a "perpetual nucleus," we trust that statement does not imply that "the perpetual nucleus" is one individual opinion, even though it should be that of Lord Shaftesbury himself.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDERS OF COURT.—March 6, 1860.

THE Right Hon. JOHN Lord CAMPBELL, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, doth hereby, in pursuance and execution of all powers and authorities enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following:—

1. From and after the 16th April, 1860, the practice of ingrossing answers on parchment shall be discontinued, and a defendant (except as otherwise provided by Order No. 5) is to file his answer, written bookwise upon paper of the same size and description as that on which bills are printed.

2. At the time when a defendant files his answer he is to leave with the Clerks of Records and Writs a fair copy thereof, (without the schedules, if any, of accounts or documents), and the Clerks of Records and Writs are to examine and correct such copy with the answer filed, and return it, so examined, with a certificate thereon that it is correct and proper to be printed.

3. A defendant is then to cause his answer to be printed from such certified copy, on paper of the same size and description, and in the same type, style, and manner, on and in which bills are required to be printed, and, before the expiration of four days from the filing of his answer, is to leave a printed copy thereof with the Clerks of Records and Writs, with a written certificate thereon by the defendant's solicitor, or by the defendant if defending in person, that such print is a true copy of the copy of the answer so certified; and if such printed copy shall not be so left, the defendant shall be subject to the same liabilities as if no answer had been filed.

4. At any time after the expiration of such four days, the defendant, within forty-eight hours after the same shall have been demanded in writing, is to have ready for delivery to the plaintiff an official and certified printed copy of the answer.

5. Notwithstanding the preceding Orders, a defendant is to be at liberty to swear to and file a printed answer.

6. On receiving from the plaintiff a demand for an official and certified printed copy of the answer, the defendant is to get a printed copy thereof examined by the Clerks of Records and Writs with the answer as filed, and to stamp such copy with a Chancery stamp for 5s.; and the Clerks of Records and Writs, on finding that such copy is duly stamped and correct, are to certify thereon that the same is a correct copy, and to mark the same as an office copy.

7. Such copy is, on demand, to be delivered to the plaintiff, who, on receipt thereof, is to pay to the defendant the amount of the stamp thereon, and at the rate of 4d. per folio for the same.

8. The plaintiff is also to be entitled to demand and receive from the defendant any additional number of printed copies of his answer, not exceeding ten, on payment for the same at the rate of one halfpenny per folio.

9. After all the defendants who are required to answer shall have filed their answers, a co-defendant is to be entitled to demand and receive from any other defendant any number of printed copies of his answer, not exceeding six, on payment for the same at the rate of one halfpenny per folio.

10. Office copies of schedules to answers of accounts or documents are to be obtained according to the practice now existing for obtaining office copies of answers.

11. Where a plaintiff is required to answer interrogatories, he is to file his answer thereto, and to get such answer printed, and to furnish printed copies thereof, in the same manner as a defendant is by these Orders required to do with respect to his answer.

12. The Clerks of Records and Writs are not to certify or mark any printed copy of an answer which has any alteration or interlineation in writing.

13. No costs are to be allowed, either as between party and party or as between solicitor and client, for any written brief of an answer, unless the Court shall direct the allowance thereof.

14. Solicitors are to be entitled to charge the fees mentioned in the schedule hereto.

15. These Orders are not to apply to answers filed by defendants or by plaintiffs defending or suing in forma pauperis, except Order 1.

16. Written bills, pleas, demurrers, special cases, duplicates of summonses originating proceedings in chambers, records for trial, interrogatories, examinations, traversing notes, replications, supplemental statements, exceptions, and certificates, to be filed in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs, are to be written on paper of the same description and size as that on which bills are printed.

Affidavits to be filed in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs are to be written on foolscap paper bookwise. Depositions of witnesses are to be written on foolscap paper bookwise or briefwise, as the examiner may think fit: provided, nevertheless, that the Clerks of Records and Writs may receive and file affidavits and depositions written otherwise than as here directed, if, in their opinion, the circumstances of the case render such reception and filing desirable or necessary.

17. In these Orders the following words have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, over and above their several ordinary meanings, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; that is to say, words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number, and words importing the masculine gender include females.

DEATH OF MR. BARON WATSON.

It is our painful duty to record the sudden death of Mr. Baron Watson, which took place on Tuesday last, while engaged in the discharge of his judicial functions. At the conclusion of his charge to the grand jury at the Montgomeryshire Assizes, at Welshpool, his Lordship, who had been for some weeks in ill-health, was observed to put his handkerchief to his face and a smelling-bottle to his nose. He leant back in his chair, and it was evident that something more than a fainting fit had seized him. Several medical gentlemen were immediately in attendance, and every means were resorted to that medical skill could devise, but he grew gradually worse, and a sofa cushion having been procured, he was laid upon it and conveyed to his lodgings, which were close at hand. He had scarcely reached them when he breathed his last. It was stated by the medical attendant to be a case of serous apoplexy. His Lordship's son, who was attending the circuit, was, of course, present with him when he expired. Perhaps, with the exception of the lamented death of the late Mr. Justice Talfourd, no similar event has occurred which has created such a deeply painful sensation.

The deceased judge, who was born in 1796, was educated at the Royal Military College, Marlow, and entered the army as cornet in the 1st Royal Dragoons in 1811, became a lieutenant in 1812, and after having served in Spain and France under the Duke of Wellington, exchanged to the 6th Dragoons, with whom he served in Belgium and France in 1815. Having retired from the army, he entered as a student of Lincoln's Inn in 1817, and practised for several years as a special pleader; he was called to the Bar in Lincoln's Inn in 1832, made a Q. C. and a Bencher of that Inn in 1843, and was appointed a Baron of the Court of Exchequer in November, 1856, when he received the honour of knighthood. He was the author of two legal works, was M. P. for Kinsale from 1811 to 1847, and for Hull from 1854 to 1856.

THE LATE MR. JARMAN.

THE following extract* from a letter by Mr. Hayes contains an unexaggerated tribute to Mr. Jarman's moral character. His merits as a text-writer cannot be better expressed than in a panegyric from the same pen, which we always thought less characteristic of the judge to whom it was addressed than of him whose name was appended to it:—

"In tracing the learning of devises through the late reports, how often do we find your Lordship reviewing a long line of authorities, noting their distinctions, correcting their errors of fact and law, and finally extracting or supplying a principle on whose broad and solid basis a multiplicity of questions, which must otherwise have called for repeated adjudication, may satisfactorily rest*."

Nothing, indeed, is more admirable than the vigilance and perspicacity with which Mr. Jarman criticised the authorities on every legal subject that came under his notice. Not captious or anxious to detect a slip, but rather best pleased when he found decision and principle most completely at one, yet he was never satisfied to let a case pass until he saw a solid foundation of principle beneath.

His power was as great in classifying his materials as in criticising them, and, perhaps unconsciously, he chose to exercise it chiefly in that department of legal science which most needed and would best reward his pains—the department of construction—which, as it has been, more than any other, the spontaneous growth of circumstances, unaffected by arbitrary regulation, is also, more than any other, intimately harmonious and consistent, while apparently confused and immethodical—the leading principle of decision, oftener felt than expressed, running through the cases, and binding them together into a tangled chain, seldom impaired, though all disordered.

His Treatise on Wills, like his edition of Powell on Devises, is rather a collection of detached essays than a complete work, which, indeed, would have been almost beyond his power, even had he devoted his whole professional life to that single task. Some notion of the mass of material which he has left untouched may be gained by turning over the pages of the last edition of Roper's Treatise on Legacies, (2 vols., 1847)—a work in which the decisions on testamentary questions scarcely noticed by Mr. Jarman are accumulated rather than arranged; and the immense value of the working tool which Mr. Jarman has given to the Profession is felt whenever Roper is resorted to for aid in some research beyond the scope of the Treatise on Wills. We do but bare justice to Messrs. Wolstenholme & Vincent in adding that their labours have fully maintained the value of the book.

The appointment of Mr. Jarman as one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery, after the abolition of the Masters, was as good an exercise as could be made of a power which ought never to have been conferred—unjust, as it necessarily was, to the Profession, and most injurious, as it has been found to be, to the suitors†.

"I fear there are names on the list of departures which call up other feelings, and excite a very different interest. Of those the most recent (dating a quarter past three a.m. last Sunday week) is that of Thomas Jarman, one of my oldest professional as well as private friends, and my coadjutor in the 'handy' volume of 'Concise Wills.' Erysipelas was the fatal disease. Those works which are now in every counsel's and judge's hands were composed under physical difficulties over which nothing but moral courage, almost heroic, could have triumphed—the works of a laborious valitudinarian and energetic cripple. The earlier, and indeed greater, part of his life was spent 'in helping' (to use his own words) 'other men into their carriages,' or at any rate to easier seats in their carriages. As a lawyer he was entirely self-educated, with the exception of such schooling (not completed) as the practice of a Bristol attorney's office could supply; and with this minimum of instruction, and his own much larger unindebted acquisitions, aided by a strong yet modest consciousness of power, the raw youth came to London scarcely less well prepared, or in any respect less competent, to write a standard work on Wills (or even to supply that grand desideratum, a treatise on instruments generally) than at any after period of his professional life. His habits of study throughout a considerable portion of the period which produced his 'Wills' and his 'Conveyancing' were primitive and pastoral. He read, thought, and worked in the open air; his study a garden, green lane, or paddock, and that under all skies, and in all weathers, and through all seasons. Of the work done in chambers much was done in severe weather, with open windows, and without a fire. Though I could not quite harden myself to those extremes, yet our tastes were so far alike that it was our wont on those early days of 'Jarman's Powell' to discuss points, and settle them very much to our own satisfaction, and eventually, in some instances, to the satisfaction of the judicature, at Jack Straw's Castle, the Woodman of Old Norwood, and on the Cotswold. I well remember, on reading in manuscript the chapter which treats of cross-remainders, being so much struck with its lucid mastery of the subject, that I immediately took it to my acuter and more experienced friend, R. H. W. Ingram, then practising in the Temple, who at once acknowledged its superiority to Cruise, then, and, to the discredit of Bar and Bench, for some years afterwards, cited as oracular. The proofs were supervised by both, but with more critical attention by Ingram, who contributed more or less to the accuracy of Jarman's labours; but the whole amount of such aids left the sterling and staple matter of the annotations and supplementary volume exclusively the product of the editor's own talent and research, under circumstances far from propitious. When all was ready for publication a patron was to be sought, and Lord Eldon was obviously the fittest name for such a work. Jarman sketched out a dedication, and, being then our visitor at Peckham, read it to us in the evening; but I objected to its wanting spice and unction, and came down the next morning with something more easy, against which Jarman in his turn protested, but which, somewhat lowered in its tone of adulation, he rather reluctantly adopted; and this is the dedication which, I think, Horace Twiss, in his 'Life of Lord Eldon,' cites, among other testimonials, in proof of the high judicial reputation of the greatest of the Great Seals of the later time. The progress of 'Jarman's Powell' was slow and obscure. Powell was a caput mortuum, weighing down a living body of sound law; Jarman a vitality, dragging about with him a sort of semi-defunct Frankenstein. I have an impression, but it may be erroneous, that Mr. Baron Parke was among the first to discover the value of the work on Wills, and bring it into court, though probably it first struck root in the dusty chambers of conveyancers, and thence gradually spread over Westminster Hall, where very possibly it may have assisted in the solution of many a problem before it found either the hardihood or candour requisite to cite and commend it as a text-book. Sweet, the publisher, used to insinuate, as I understood Jarman once to say, that a book on Devises was 'caviare to the general,' and that a much brisker sale would have been insured by the more intelligible title of a treatise on Wills. In this there may have been something of sly irony. By the way, in any sketch of Jarman's professional career, justice ought to be done to Sweet as a bold and liberal patron of young untied legal writers. Poor Jarman's labours were repeatedly suspended, sometimes apparently brought to a final close, by serious illness; first (while Powell was in hand) by an affection of the eyesight; then by an abscess, extending nearly from hip to heel, and terminating in a fixed limb; and more recently by an attack so severe that both body and mind were supposed to be hopelessly prostrated; but he survived these and other trials, to resume and complete his laborious undertakings, and work on at conveyancing generally, but more especially the case department, with increasing reputation and practice to the last. Nothing could subdue his fortitude or disturb his equanimity. 'Æquam memento rebus in arduis servare mentem' was the pagan motto of the Christian soldier."

THE PROPOSED STAMP DUTY ON AGREEMENTS FOR LEASES.

THE following judicious remarks on this part of Mr. Gladstone's scheme are by Mr. Hopgood, of King William-street:—

"First, it is proposed to make the temporary (and oftentimes loosely drawn) document or memorandum, which sometimes precedes a lease, the principal document, by impressing on it the stamp which the lease ought to bear, leaving the lease to bear a denoting stamp. This will render the preliminary document a necessary part of the title to the leasehold interest at all future times, and will constantly give rise to questions which will seriously complicate leasehold titles, and may also complicate the ground landlord's title in cases where leases are granted under leasing powers. It is a fundamental rule in conveyancing to keep all unnecessary documents off the title, and this cannot be done if the proposed change in the law should take place. This objection applies to the subject generally.

"Secondly, it will be unfair to charge a landlord with duty on a lease which may never (through the default of the intended tenant) be granted. This objection will be a serious one in cases of agreements for building leases, which are frequently thrown up, owing to the inability of the builder to carry out his contract; and even if the burthen of the stamp be thrown in the first instance on the builder, it may be oppressive to him.

"Thirdly, with reference to contracts for building leases, i. e. where a person takes a plot of ground at a certain rent, under a contract to build a certain number of houses, which are to be demised to him or his nominees at apportioned parts of the entire rent, the proposed scheme would prove most perplexing. The preliminary building contract in these cases is not referred to in the leases granted pursuant thereto, if it can be avoided, in order that the lessees shall not be affected with notice of its contents. The expediency of this practice is universally felt, and in every well-drawn estate act it is expressly enacted that the preliminary contracts shall not form part of the lessee's title. The reasons for this are well understood by practical conveyancers. These preliminary contracts are in very many cases varied before they are carried into effect; in some cases the rent is increased in consideration of advances of money, or supplies of materials, made to the builder by the landlord; in many cases leases are granted to the builder or his nominees at rents varying from the original terms, in consideration of a premium, or under other special arrangements; in all which cases (under the existing law) a stamp on the lease is requisite, according to the circumstances, the obvious rule of convenience being that each deed should be a perfect document in itself, irrespective of any other document or dealing of the parties thereto; in many cases there is no such agreement as can conveniently be stamped, although the circumstances may be such as to constitute, in equity, a contract for a lease. I may instance the mode in which leases are frequently agreed to be granted in some of the great estates in the neighbourhood of London, where persons attend a board held at the estate office, and make proposals for leases, which are entered on the minutes of the board, and which are afterwards acted on. This is done to a very great extent. To one accustomed to the practical working of matters of this kind the proposed scheme is one replete with difficulty.

"Fourthly, the trouble attending the practice of stamping deeds with denoting stamps is well worthy of attention. Under an act passed a few years ago it was imperative to stamp counterpart leases with a denoting stamp, in order to insure (as was supposed) the due stamping of the leases. The inconvenience was so great that it was found necessary to repeal the act in the following year. In cases of building contracts, where many houses are built, and where, consequently, many leases are granted, and on which contracts, as they run over a considerable time, there will be, almost to a certainty, numerous indorsements of the various intervening arrangements between the landlord and the builder, it would be impossible for the officers at the Stamp Office, within any reasonable time, to say whether or not the agreement bore its proper stamp; besides which, it is very inconvenient and hazardous to send original documents of great value time after time to the Stamp Office. In some cases which have come before me professionally, if the proposed rule had been in existence, it would have been necessary to have sent the same document to Somerset House more than fifty times in a year.

"Fifthly, suppose that a lease is about to be granted to the nominee of the builder, (party to the original contract), in consideration of a premium paid to him by the intended lessee, the lease is executed by all parties, and the money about to be paid; but the business cannot be completed, because, under the new regulation, the lease and the preliminary agreement entered into by the builder with the ground landlord, all 'duly executed,' must be produced to the proper officer at Somerset House, to enable him to certify that the lease may be stamped with the proper denoting stamp. Therefore the agent of the lessee and the agent of the builder must meet at Somerset House with the requisite documents in order that the lease may be stamped. But suppose (and this is a very common case) that the builder has deposited his original building contract with some third person as a security for money or building materials, it is obvious that the presence of the agent of the depositor at Somerset House will also be requisite; or suppose (as is also a very common occurrence) that the intended lessee is obliged to borrow a portion of the money about to be paid to the builder, and that a mortgage is to be executed concurrently with the granting the lease; or suppose that the intended lessee does not wish to execute the counterpart until he is satisfied that the lease is all correct, (or, in effect, that the original agreement is all correct), the landlord's solicitor of course will not part with the lease until he has had the counterpart delivered over; the mortgagee's solicitor will not part with his money until the lease can be handed to him; the builder's solicitor will not agree to either party having the lease until his client has his money. What is to be done in such a case, seeing that the matter must stand in abeyance until the Stamp Office authorities are satisfied that the original agreement was duly stamped?"

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.

(Concluded from p. 89).

The question of the expenses created by new trials in criminal cases involves the very essence of this measure, because it is only a mockery to give the right of appeal to a prisoner, and at the same time to insist upon his paying the costs. The honourable and learned gentleman must be aware that a motion for a writ of certiorari, to be laid before one of the Courts in Westminster Hall, is a remedy which, to the vast majority of persons convicted at quarter sessions and assizes, is perfectly nugatory and inaccessible.

It would only have effect in political cases, or in cases where public sympathy was strongly moved, and a subscription made to enable the prisoner to defray the cost of a new trial. Debarred from availing themselves of this remedy by its costliness, prisoners, no doubt, would be glad to have recourse to the dark and secret proceedings of the Home Office; and my opinion is, that the present administration of the law would continue with scarcely any alteration. The truth is, that if the House goes the length of conferring a right of appeal on every prisoner who is convicted at assizes or quarter sessions, they can scarcely hesitate before long to grant the principle that the expenses of the appeals should be defrayed from some public fund. That was the opinion given by Mr. Greaves in his evidence before the Lords' committee, for he did not shrink from advising that appeals should be conducted at the public expense, which he thought would be moderate. There is a right of appeal allowed at present in a large class of criminal cases. In summary cases tried before the magistrates at petty sessions there is an appeal to quarter sessions. In these cases, however, the appeal must be made at the cost of the prisoner himself; and I may mention that the recent course of legislation has been, not to give appeals even in summary cases—the Aggravated Assaults Act, for instance, under which more than 2000 persons were convicted in the year 1858, and about 1500 sentenced to imprisonment, generally with hard labour, and no appeal whatever is allowed. In cases, however, where the prisoner possesses the right of appeal, it is remarkable how seldom it is made use of. In the year 1858 no less than 18,630 individuals were convicted in England and Wales under the Vagrant Act, and yet, of these, ten only appealed. In the same year 7379 persons were convicted of offences against the Game Laws, of whom only fourteen appealed; and out of 11,211 convictions for malicious trespass and damage of property only two appeals are recorded, of which one was rewarded with success. . . . In civil cases the plaintiff and the defendant have an equal right of moving for a new trial; but in the bill before us an unilateral right of appeal is given to the defendant, but withheld from the plaintiff. But if there is anything in the argument for assimilation, both parties should be endowed with the privilege of appeal. I am far, however, from recommending that the Crown should have any such right. I believe it would be highly disadvantageous; and I have no desire to see any innovation made in the ancient right of our law, that a plea of autrefois acquit is to be held sacred, and that no person should be put in jeopardy twice for the same offence. . . . Supposing there be a unilateral appeal, I will ask the House to consider what would be the consequences. Upon that question I am able to give the opinion of some experienced judges, which I think will have some weight with the House.

Lord Denman said—"I think there are grave objections to anything which will give countenance to the opinion that wrong convictions are of frequent occurrence, and that a new court ought to be erected, or the present courts empowered to correct them by motions for a second trial. One consequence of such power might be, a degree of laxity of juries in considering their verdict, and less reluctance to convict on doubtful evidence, because the new trial might correct their mistake. And, after all, the second trial could not guarantee the security of the truth; the second jury is not more infallible than the first."

Lord Brougham said—"Most undoubtedly, if it were thought that you might set an error right by moving for a new trial, there would be a good deal less of that sort of awful feeling of responsibility under which both judge, prosecutor's and prisoner's counsel, and jury act; whereas at present they feel that what they are doing is remediless if any error is committed. I believe you would have very frequent errors committed. I am quite sure upon jurors it would have an effect; and this is a question about jurors rather than about judges."

The present system of our criminal law is one of great tenderness to the prisoner. It is always understood that the prosecutor's counsel abstains from any strong remarks in his speech; the judge prevents any unfair advantage being taken of the prisoner, and if there is a doubt it is given in the prisoner's favour. I will not say that there is an abstinence from that system of hunting down a prisoner of which we have sometimes met with instances in foreign courts, but, at all events, there is great forbearance shown in the manner in which the case is pressed against the prisoner. It is not accidental, but it is owing to the feeling of all persons concerned that the verdict on the facts is absolutely irreversible. As regards questions of law, as the hon. member has stated, there are full means of appeal at present. In order that the House may see how favourable is the position of the English prisoner compared with that of a prisoner under some of the most civilised systems of law on the continent, I will read a statement which draws a contrast between English and French jurisprudence. I do not do this with a view of making any invidious comparison between the two systems. I assume that there are sufficient grounds for the rules of criminal law which are followed under the highly civilised system of jurisprudence which exists in France; but I merely wish to draw a contrast for the purpose of shewing what is the position of the English prisoner compared with that of prisoners under other systems, and that it is possible materially to alter that position to his disadvantage.

1. "In France all prosecutions are instituted and carried on by the public prosecutor. In England they are almost always left to private individuals, generally persons of limited means.

2. "In France an accused person is put upon his trial by a report (called a 'mise en accusation') of magistrates or judges, (Tribunal d'Instructions). In England there must be the verdict of a grand jury or a coroner's jury.

3. "In France an accused person is most rigidly questioned, both before and at his trial, not only as to the circumstances of the particular case, but as to other charges which may have been made against him, and as to all the events of his life. A history of him is given in the acte d'accusation, and his character, habits, and disposition, as well as those of his friends and relations, are minutely described, and he is examined as to all these matters by the president in the presence of the jury. As the trial proceeds he is called upon to explain the conduct imputed to him, and to admit or deny the particular facts alleged by the witnesses. In England no questions can be put to the accused either before the magistrate or at his trial, but he is at full liberty to make any statements which he thinks likely to be in his favour. The investigation is confined to the single offence with which he is charged, and previous charges, or even convictions, cannot be brought forward against him until the jury has decided that he is guilty of that offence. His previous bad character cannot be given in evidence to prove his guilt, but he is allowed to bring it forward, if good, to prove his innocence.

4. "In France the accused may be found guilty by a bare majority of the jury. In England the whole number must concur; if one only refuses to join in such a verdict, it cannot be pronounced."

That is a perfectly accurate description; and it may be added, that there is a rule in English law, which is never departed from, that a penal statute must be construed strictly. If there is any doubt as to the verbal construction, that doubt always avails in favour of the prisoner. What would be the position of the prisoner if the rules of law which the hon. gentleman seeks to establish were substituted for the present law? The counsel for the prosecution would be able to say with truth, "Gentlemen of the jury, if your verdict against the prisoner should be wrong, he has an appeal, and it can be set aside; but if you acquit him, your verdict is irreversible; therefore pray incline to the side of severity, and not to that of mercy. If you are wrong, there is an appeal for the prisoner, at present at his own expense, though we hope soon it will be at the public expense; but if he is acquitted, the Crown and the prosecutor are precluded by your verdict, and the decision is unchangeable." The whole feeling of the Court, which every one familiar with the proceedings of a criminal court knows is tender and merciful towards the prisoner, would be reversed, and there would be found, not only a sentiment, but a rational ground, for giving the advantage to the prosecutor against the prisoner.

Influenced by these considerations, Mr. McMahon withdrew the bill, which, with the view of establishing a Court of Appeal, he had introduced into Parliament, and it is most probable that future efforts in this direction will rather seek to improve the mode in which the royal prerogative of mercy is exercised, than to promote uniformity in the civil and the criminal law.

We may here properly call attention to the suggestions of the late Mr. Baron Alderson for the revision of sentences in certain cases. His observations will be found published in his Memoirs, (p. 79), and are to the following effect:—

"I would beg to suggest a larger and preliminary plan for the improvement of the present method of final decision on judicial sentences. This very difficult duty belongs at present peculiarly to the Home Office. I have long thought that this should not be left to the Home Secretary alone, but that, in order to give greater authority, and to insure steadiness of practice, it should be vested in a board of six eminent persons, of whom the Secretary for the Home Department should be one. To this board all cases of mitigation of punishment, both from England, Scotland, and Ireland, might be referred. And I would add, that no execution should ever take place till after the case had been laid before the board by a report from the presiding judge, who, in England, should also be required to attend with his report. This, you will perceive, is the old system, somewhat altered, of the Recorder's report, extended from Middlesex to the whole United Kingdom. This, I think, would be an advantageous step towards a proper reform of our criminal jurisprudence, because such a body of eminent persons, having so many cases laid before them, would very soon establish general rules as to punishments, which it would be easy for the judges to follow, and which (if on experiment found to answer) might be embodied afterwards in a legislative enactment—legislation thus following, as it ought to do, judicious experiment. Besides, such a body of men would not be likely to be affected by any change of Ministry. The Home Secretary would, it is true, leave them; but the others (not being members of the actual Ministry) would probably remain in office, and so the same definite course of action would be still persevered in. At present a change of Government makes a considerable difference in a doubtful case, in the probability whether a criminal is to be executed or not.

"Nor would parliamentary interest, nor the suggested influence in Ireland of the priesthood, have any weight with such a body. Indeed, I think the removal of these questions from the provincial atmosphere of Ireland would be a peculiar benefit derivable from this plan. The body, I should suggest, would consist of the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, the Home Secretary, the Secretary for Ireland, and two other Privy Counsellors to be named by the Crown.

"To such a body also all proposed legislative measures relating to the criminal law might be conveniently referred, as to a committee, to advise the Crown thereon.

"I am not aware that this requires any act of Parliament; it may be done by the proper authority of the Crown itself. It would only be necessary in capital cases for the judges to direct specially the executions to take place on some one given day—say the last day of Michaelmas Term, after the Summer, and the last day of Trinity Term, after the Spring Circuit. The board might then meet to consider these cases on some day before Michaelmas, and on some day before Trinity Term.

"One incidental good effect from all executions taking place on a given day might be produced by directing, that throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland the clergy of the established churches should read over to the respective congregations the names of the criminals on the Sunday prior to the day of execution, and that a solemn prayer should be prepared for that occasion. This should be a general notification to all, and would make the most of the sad example."

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

TRINITY TERM, 1880.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Trinity Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Friday, the 11th day of May next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Friday, the 18th day of May next, and will be continued on the Saturday and Monday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Friday morning, the 18th May, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Saturday morning, the 19th May, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Monday morning, the 21st May, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Monday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8 of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the History of the Prerogative, the History of the Law of Libel, of the Doctrine of General Warrants, of the Law of Treason, with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History, from the 1st to the 16th inclusive.

All candidates will be expected to know the leading events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III, and to possess an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, of the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, and the Act of Settlement.

THE READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases, and the following Cases in the second volume:—Warmstrey v. Lady Tanfeld, Rowe v. Dawson, Ryall v. Rowles, Thornbrough v. Baker, and Peachey v. The Duke of Somerset, with the Notes on those Cases; Mitford on the Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction; c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 1, s. 3, (the first six pages); c. 2, s. 1; c. 2, s. 2, part 1, (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2, (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; c. 3.

Candidates for certificates of having passed a satisfactory examination will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for a studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

THE READER ON THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Joshua Williams on the Law of Real Property, 5th ed.

2. On Joint Tenancy and Tenancy in Common. Morley v. Bird, (3 Ves. 629), and the Notes to that Case in Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing, 712.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 24, 1860.

THE bill introduced into Parliament by the Attorney-General is a great advance in legislation upon the cognate subjects of bankruptcy and insolvency. Reflecting the energy and courage of its framer, it grapples boldly with the difficulties which have been found by experience to press most heavily upon commercial interests; it removes anomalies, which did not exist merely in theory, but were the means of working injustice and oppression; it simplifies procedure, and tends to produce a more efficient system as between debtor and creditor, at far less cost and vexation and delay than have hitherto been incurred. The leading characteristics of this important measure are the breaking down of the distinction between traders and non-traders, when once levelled by insolvency; the abolition of the five London commissioners in their official character, and the vesting of their judicial functions in one judge, to be assisted, in cases where the assets do not exceed 300*l.*, by the Insolvent Court in Portugal-street*. Henceforth, as it is proposed, ministerial acts are to be performed by the registrars; the country commissioners are to be gradually absorbed in the county court judges; the messengers are to be discontinued; acts of bankruptcy are reduced in number, and are greatly simplified;

* We doubt whether this Court ought not to be abolished; at all events, we trust that it will be removed to a better and more convenient home.

the creditors will have a greater control over the proceedings, in which they have the greatest interest, the official assignee acting simply for their aid and protection; private arrangements are facilitated; the classification of certificates is put an end to, criminal acts being remitted to the regular criminal tribunals; while imprisonment for mere debt is practically abolished.

Our present code of bankruptcy and insolvency was described by the Attorney-General as the very worst in any country in Europe, as frustrating its main objects, and consuming in expenses one-third of the property administered under its provisions. This description tells but badly for legislation, which has so often revised and reconsidered the subject, the last consolidation bill dating no further back than 1849; and yet Sir Richard Bethell tells us, "In principle, nothing ought to be more simple than a law of bankruptcy. Bankruptcy is nothing in the world more than taking the whole of the debtor's property by one universal execution, or by one universal surrender, for the benefit of his creditors; and all that would be required would be a tribunal simply for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the rights of those who are interested in the distribution, and some simple machinery for realising the property, and dividing it among the parties entitled. In theory, then, one would imagine that it was most easy to construct a tribunal, and establish an institution, that should devote itself to the task of realising the property of the insolvent, and, with the advantage of an established body, that this would be done at a very small and reasonable cost." He, however, informs the House that "such is the enormous amount of official persons who have been introduced into the establishment of bankruptcy, that at the present time the expenses of the administration of an estate in the Court of Bankruptcy amount to very nearly, if not quite, 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. upon the property realised. It is hardly possible to bring home to the mind a correct idea of the enormous amount of error or impurity of management involved in that admitted result. For every 100 $\frac{1}{2}$  of a debtor's estate realised in bankruptcy, 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  is deducted for the costs of collection and distribution. Now, in ordinary life, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. for the collection of property is considered a very high rate of charge; but the unfortunate creditor whose debt amounts to 600 $\frac{1}{2}$ , even if that be realised, has to submit to a deduction of 200 $\frac{1}{2}$  to satisfy the claims and provide for the maintenance of the parties appointed by the State to conduct this business, taken out of his own hands."

The Attorney-General would willingly propose the total abolition of imprisonment for debt, but at present contents himself with attacking the causes which lead to it. "The principle," he says, "unquestionably ought to be, that if the insolvent is willing to give up the whole of his property, and submit himself to examination, and is found not to have been guilty of any fraud, such as obtaining goods on credit by any deceitful proceeding, he should be as much entitled to be discharged without imprisonment as is the trader. What you have done, however, is, that you have sent the insolvent to prison, and subjected him to the degradation of incarceration, and all this merely that you may wring from him a full discovery and surrender of his property for distribution among his creditors. Imprisonment as a punishment for incurring debt or becoming insolvent, without fraud, is inconsistent with the dictates of humanity. Treading in the path of all the distinguished men in the other House who have adorned the jurisprudence of this country, we therefore propose entirely to abolish the distinction between bankruptcy and insolvency, and to make one law applicable to both. The result of this will be that the creditors of the insolvent will have no motive or reason for sending him to prison; they will without difficulty be able to obtain a discovery of his estate and the possession of his property, together with all the advantages they now enjoy with respect to the trader, without the necessity of incarcerating him. On the other hand, I hope means will be found under this bill by which not only will our gaols be relieved from their insolvent inmates, but an end will be put to a spectacle frequently witnessed, to the general reproach of this country—namely, that of persons put into prison for debt remaining there, and defying their creditors, by persistently refusing to make a disclosure of their estate."

Any person is to be at liberty to present a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself; and this he may do in forma pauperis. On the other hand, he may be made a bankrupt after he has been in prison fourteen days upon committal for debt.

Acts of bankruptcy are thus dealt with:—"The non-trader cannot be subjected to the same law which now affects the trader, because the acts of bankruptcy which may be committed by a trader are many of them of a very technical and artificial nature, and a gentleman or a person in the highest station, and perfectly solvent, might by accident be involved in the commission of an act of bankruptcy, without being at all aware of the consequences of what he had inadvertently done. I therefore propose that those technical acts of bankruptcy, such as denying yourself to a creditor at your home, and others of the same kind, shall not be included in the law of bankruptcy, but that there shall be substituted for the list now in force a few plain and simple tests of insolvency. If the debtor absconds, and leaves the realm, there can be no doubt as to what ought to be the consequences. If, being abroad, he remains abroad to defeat his creditors, there can be no dispute as to the manner in which he ought to be dealt with. If he make any fraudulent disposal of his property, or any part of his property, or any fraudulent preference, being insolvent, there can be little doubt that the same rule ought to apply to both trader and non-trader. If he causes himself to be committed to prison, or if he permits part of his property to be seized and sold under an execution, that is a tolerably clear proof of a state of insolvency. Further than this, if a judgment is recovered against any person, though he be not a trader, this bill provides a mode of summoning the judgment debtor before the Court, when, if he is unable to shew that he can, within a reasonable time, satisfy or give security for the satisfaction of the judgment, he is to be adjudged a bankrupt. These are the principal acts of bankruptcy which will remain in operation under this bill. They are, I apprehend, unmistakable criteria of general insolvency, and there is, therefore, no reason why they should not apply alike to the cases of traders and non-traders."

The independent power of creditors is much and beneficially increased. The Attorney-General points out the great inconvenience of being unable to escape from the Court of Bankruptcy, after you have once entered it, until the whole of the estate has been administered. "A creditor," he says, "may wish to invoke the aid of the bankruptcy law for a particular purpose, but he is unable to obtain that aid without winding up the whole estate, when once he is within the walls of the court, and getting it administered—that is to say, without sacrificing one entire third of the whole of the property. That is a great injury. Therefore I am anxious to provide, that if creditors are compelled to resort to the Court of Bankruptcy for any particular purpose, they may at any time they please, provided a certain majority of the creditors consent thereto, suspend the proceedings, take the whole estate out of the Court of Bankruptcy, and commit it to any mode of private administration which they may consider more economical. There is another advantage which will attend the plan established by this bill. An honest debtor might desire to make a disclosure of his affairs to his creditors, with the view of making some arrangement, and preventing the necessity of bankruptcy. But the very disclosure puts him in the power of some particular creditor, or some individual who wishes to pursue, perhaps, a private end of his own, and who opposes an obstacle in the way of completing an effective arrangement, by prosecuting an adjudication of bankruptcy. I hope to provide a mode of relieving persons in this situation from the embarrassment I have referred to. According to the plan embodied in the bill, immediately on adjudication of bankruptcy a meeting of creditors will be appointed, and at that meeting, if a majority of the creditors present should deem it advisable not to go on with the bankruptcy, or to proceed with it only in a limited extent, they will have power of coming to an arrangement for the purpose, notice of their resolution being given to all the creditors; and then, if a majority of three-fourths in value should determine to suspend the prosecution of the adjudication of bankruptcy, they may suspend it at once, and no further steps would be taken under it. Thus the honest debtor, without committing an act of bankruptcy, may petition for an adjudication, and make to the creditors a proposal of compromise or arrangement. If the creditors confide in him, and find his proposal convenient, suitable, and just, then three-fourths in point of value, concurring together, will have the power of making a conclusive and binding arrangement, without the possibility of being interfered with by an adverse individual. This power is given to the creditors to be exercised at any time, and is not limited to the first instance. In this way I propose to make the law of bankruptcy as part of the law of debtor and creditor, and to avoid the necessity for the great cost, inconvenience, and suffering which at present are the only terms on which parties can get the benefit they desire. We are all aware that a great stigma attaches to the name of bankrupt. Accordingly a most natural wish exists on the part of the honest man to avoid the reproach of bankruptcy. As I have already said, there is great difficulty in gratifying such a wish, because the moment he exposes his affairs he lays himself open to adverse proceedings. Now, upon examining the statistics of this subject, the House will be surprised to find that the contrast between the number of adjudications in bankruptcy and the number of trust deeds and deeds of arrangement is immense. In 1858, and for a series of years antecedent thereto, the adjudications, as compared with trust deeds and deeds of arrangement, were not more than one in seven. In 1868 the number of adjudications was 660, while the number of trust deeds and deeds of composition and arrangement are computed to have been more than 8000. But why is it that in cases of insolvency creditors are content to put up with the imperfect relief of the trust deed, where they have no supervision by the law, no power of examining the debtor, no stringent authority for compelling the investigation of accounts? The answer is, that partly the expense, partly the immense inconvenience, partly the stringent provisions of the bankrupt law, which are founded upon great inhumanity, as well as great want of policy—all these things together conspire to induce the creditor to prefer the trust deed, imperfect as it is, to proceedings by adjudication in bankruptcy. But will it not be just still to allow the creditor to make his election, while at the same time you give him the whole benefit of the bankrupt law? I have endeavoured to accomplish that object. If a debtor is desirous of meeting his creditors, and of giving up all his property by deed of composition, arrangement, or assignment, he will be enabled to do so, and will have for a certain period of time a secure opportunity afforded him for that purpose—secure, I mean, against the intervention of a creditor, who may destroy the whole plan by procuring an adverse adjudication in bankruptcy. But I give this privilege to the debtor only upon certain conditions, which are, that the deed of arrangement and composition shall be brought into the Court of Bankruptcy, and registered there; that he shall pay for that registration the sum, and only the sum, which he would have paid for an adjudication in bankruptcy; and that as soon as the deed is registered, the debtor, the trustees, and the creditors shall at once be placed in the same relative position as if the debtor had been adjudicated a bankrupt, and the trustees had been duly appointed his assignees. They shall have all the benefit of the bankrupt law. They may resort to it to the extent to which they may need its interposition; while, as far as the debtor is concerned, there will be no reproach, no obloquy, no public proceedings, save so far as publicity may be requisite to the creditor. The creditors may resort to the Court of Bankruptcy to secure the examination of any person whose evidence they may require. In this way the whole law of bankruptcy will be at once incorporated with the law which regulates the relations of debtor and creditor and trustees; and the administration of the estate will go on, the creditor knowing that he may at any time invoke the interposition of the Court, and derive the same advantage as though there had been an actual adjudication in bankruptcy. The benefit to the creditor and trustees by this arrangement will be exceedingly great, because if a question arises involving matters of legal controversy, power is given to the creditors and parties interested to state a case for the opinion of the judge in bankruptcy, and they will accordingly receive the aid of the Court, and get the matter decided by the judge, thus deriving the same advantage from the tribunal as if they were actually and legitimately within its walls in the position of bankrupt, assignees, and creditor."

The procedure and relative positions of the official assignee and the creditors' assignees are thus sketched:—"An adjudication will be made immediately the petition is presented; but in case of a contested adjudication, a period of not less than three days, and not exceeding seven, will be allowed to elapse; that interval, however, will not interfere with the measures to be taken for the preservation of the property of the estate itself. An official assignee will be assigned to the estate, who will be charged with that duty. . . . The official assignee will have the charge and custody of the estate up to the appointment of the assignees under the fiat. Many burthensome charges will be taken off the estate; it will be in the power of the official assignee to go to the judge in chambers and obtain the necessary authority to keep open the trade, carry on the business in which the bankrupt was engaged, and prevent the necessity of breaking up the establishment; he will keep things in the condition required for the payment of the creditors till they shall have the power to speak for themselves. The bill proceeds on the principle that the estate of the debtor belongs to the creditors. If, at the meeting of the creditors, they determine to go on with the bankruptcy, an assignee will be chosen. . . . I propose, then, that immediately on the selection of the creditors' assignee—supposing the creditors should be determined to choose an assignee from among them—selves, or apart from their own body—the official assignee shall be bound to render to him a full and particular account of all his receipts and payments, and to hand over the whole of the property of which he has taken possession. I propose, however, immediately after, that the official assignee shall stand in the position of auditor of the accounts of the creditors' assignee, and to continue the obligation on the creditors' assignee of paying all the monies which he may receive into the Bank of England. . . . . What I propose is, that that great invention of printing, which has been so slow in finding its way into the administration of the law, should, in the present case, be introduced to supply the place of that cumbersome and inconvenient parchment which has hitherto been employed; for I will undertake to say that one-fourth of the existing litigation would be avoided if the mode of learning the contents of deeds, and ascertaining their accuracy, and rendering oneself familiar with their contents, were made more easy by the course which I suggest. I propose, therefore, in conformity with that opinion, and with the mode of proceeding adopted by railway and other incorporated companies, that the creditors' assignee shall render quarterly accounts of the whole of his receipts, the payments he has made, and all other circumstances relating to the estate; that that quarterly account shall be audited and examined by the official assignee; that immediate recourse shall be had to the registrar or the judge if any question should happen to be raised thereon; that it shall be vouched by the creditors' assignee; and that the creditors' assignee shall be charged with the duty of seeing that all monies that have come into his hands have been faithfully paid into the Bank as soon as they have been received. I propose, moreover, that printed copies of those accounts, when audited, in the form of a balance-sheet of the bankrupt's estate, shall be sent to every creditor; so that, within three months after the bankruptcy, printed accounts, in the common form of those used by railway companies, will be placed in the hands of each creditor, without calling upon him to travel outside his door, or to employ an attorney to ascertain how the estate is being administered. I ought to have stated, that in order the more expeditiously to effect this object, I have made provision, that when the creditors are ascertained, a printed list of the names of those who have a claim to the amount of 10*l.* shall be sent to each creditor."

It is also proposed to give to a majority of creditors the power, when the assets do not exceed 1000*l.*, to transfer the administration of the estate to the county court. In the case of the death of the bankrupt, the same power of administering his estate in bankruptcy is to be given as if he had remained alive. "The estate of the deceased debtor may thus be administered, in the simplest and most expeditious way, at an amount of cost very little exceeding 5*l.* per cent. on the amount of his debts."

The future-acquired property of all bankrupts is to be protected (in the absence of fraud) against all debts contracted before bankruptcy.

Such are the main provisions of the new bill, which, on its introduction, appeared to meet with the approval of the House of Commons, and which promises to be the most important legal reform of 1860.

Reviews.

A Compendium of English and Scotch Law, stating their Differences; with a Dictionary of Parallel Terms and Phrases. By JAMES PATERSON, Esq., M.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.
[Edinburgh: A. & C. Black, 1860.]

As historical parallels bring out in strong relief the characteristics of men, and the merits or demerits of their actions, so do these legal parallels exhibit in a clear light the advantages possessed by one system of jurisprudence as compared with another, and suggest weighty considerations for their amendment and assimilation. To the law reformer, to the legislator, and to the jurist a work of this nature is of peculiar value, affording to them the means of viewing, side by side, the laws of England and of Scotland in their most important processes and results, and of thus tracing the distinctive features of all those great juridical codes which have been raised upon the Roman law, as contrasted with those which rest upon the feudal system. The author says, with truth—"England and Scotland have long been running the race of civilisation under similar circumstances, but it is well known that their laws are nearly as distinct as if each was a foreign country to the other. . . . A common Legislature, and in many respects a common Supreme Court, have latterly, no doubt, confined them very much within the same channel; yet, notwithstanding many approximations, assimilations, and roundings of angularities, the law of one country is still a sealed book to the other. England rather glories in her ignorance, and Scotland confidently rebukes this insular pride by counting over the adaptations from her own code which have now and then been paraded by her neighbour under new names as original reforms. English lawyers do not profess to know anything of the law of Scotland, and seldom, if ever, resort to it, either for principles or for illustrations. It is often otherwise with Scottish counsel. Whenever there is an opening, or the necessities of their argument point the way, one or other of the parties seldom fails to call in aid details from the ample storehouse of English law; yet so ambiguous are found to be the responses from this quarter, that the Scottish Courts generally refuse to follow into the forbidden ground, and end by rebuking such curiosity as at once perplexing and unprofitable.

"As Scotland," he continues, "still resolutely asserts her distinct nationality, and there is no immediate prospect of her renouncing her native laws, and unlearning the language in which they are written, the necessity of some key of intercommunication between the two codes is apparent, and has long been felt. The populations are now so intermixed by the complicated ties of relationship, residence, and commerce, that there are few who do not occasionally suffer inconvenience from finding their legal rights abruptly dislocated or shrouded in mystery by simply passing across the border. This is peculiarly felt by the gradually increasing class of persons who hold property and maintain business relations and establishments in both countries. Legal advisers in such cases are generally as much in the dark as their clients. The marked difference of professional language has led to a settled state of 'imperfect sympathies' between English and Scotch lawyers, and an interpreter is generally required. What is obviously wanted, therefore, is some work which will enable a person, who has by habit become tolerably familiar with his legal bearings in one country, to ascertain with some precision his latitude when occupying an analogous position in the other."

The leading divisions of the work are the following—
1. Real property, and rights incidental thereto.

2. Personal property.
3. Succession to a deceased person's estate.
4. Personal and domestic relations.
5. Public law.
6. Courts—jurisdiction and procedure.
7. Several points of international law.

A Dictionary of Parallel Terms and Phrases, which also forms the index, concludes the work, and will be found very useful as an interpreter between the Scotch and English lawyer.

The Professions of both countries are indebted to our author—utroque jure peritus—for thus introducing them to each other—an introduction that will enable them to enlarge their views, to correct their prejudices, and to amend faults on both sides.

With a view to promote these objects, we recommend to their careful perusal Mr. Paterson's excellent book.

REGULATIONS OF THE REGISTRARS OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY,

Respecting the Transaction of Business in their Office, issued on the 15th March, 1860.

Generally.

1. Pleas, demurrers, exceptions for insufficiency or scandal, motions for a decree, original causes, special cases, causes for further consideration, and appeals and rehearings, are to be set down by the registrar's clerk at the order of course seat on the same day the order, petition, Record and Writ Clerk's certificate, request, or other document required for that purpose, is produced to or left with him; and he is to retain any such petition, certificate, or request for filing.

Pleas and Demurrers.

(Cons. Ord. 21, rule 9; Cons. Ord. 14, rules 14, 15, 17).

2. Pleas and demurrers filed in causes attached to the Rolls Court are to be set down upon production of an order drawn up by the secretary to the Master of the Rolls.

3. Pleas and demurrers filed in causes attached to the courts of the Vice-Chancellors are to be set down upon an order to be drawn up by the registrar on petition of course to the Lord Chancellor, and dated the day the petition is left. The petition (which does not require any fiat from the Lord Chancellor, nor any stamp) must state the day when the plea or demurrer was filed, and whether it be to the whole or part of the bill, and be subscribed by the solicitor in the form following; that is to say—

"A. B., plaintiff's [or, defendant's] solicitor.
"1st March, 1860."

4. Pleas and demurrers are to be set down within the following times (exclusive of vacations) after the same are filed; that is to say—

Demurrers to whole bill ..... 12 days.
Demurrers to part of bill, and pleas to whole or part of bill ..... 3 weeks.

Exceptions for Insufficiency or Scandal.

(Cons. Ord. 16, rule 10).

5. Exceptions to answers for insufficiency, or to any pleading or other matter for scandal, are to be set down upon production of the Record and Writ Clerk's certificate of the filing thereof, indorsed by the solicitor of the party filing the same with a request for that purpose, in the form following; that is to say—

"I request that the exceptions referred to in this certificate may be set down for hearing.

"A. B., plaintiff's [or, defendant's] solicitor.

Motions for Decree.

(Cons. Ord. 33, rule 9; Cons. Ord. 37, rule 10).

6. Motions for a decree are to be set down within seven days after the notice is served, upon production of the Record and Writ Clerk's certificate that the cause is in a fit state to enable the plaintiff to move for a decree, indorsed by the plaintiff's solicitor with a memorandum of the date when the notice was served, and the date when it will expire; and, if there be any infant defendant, stating that a guardian ad litem has been appointed; or if there be not, stating that there is not any infant defendant. After the seven days have expired the motion is not to be set down without the consent in writing of the defendant's solicitors. The memorandum may be in the form following; that is to say—

"Notice served — day of — expires — day of —."

(i. e. one lunar month after service).

"A guardian ad litem has been appointed to the infant defendant A. B."

or,
"There is not any infant defendant."

"C. D., plaintiff's solicitor.

Original Causes.

(Cons. Ord. 6, rules 2, 3).

7. Causes are to be set down for original hearing upon production of the Record and Writ Clerk's certificate that the cause is in a fit state to be set down for hearing, indorsed by the solicitor of the party setting down the same with a memorandum, stating, if there be any infant defendant, that a guardian ad litem has been appointed; or if there be not, stating that there is not any infant defendant. The memorandum may be in the form following; that is to say—

"A guardian ad litem has been appointed to the infant defendant A. B."

or,
"There is not any infant defendant."

"A. B., plaintiff's solicitor.

Special Cases.

(Act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, ss. 12, 13).

8. If all parties are not sui juris, special cases are to be set down upon production of an order for leave to set down the same; or if all parties are sui juris, upon production of the Record and Writ Clerk's certificate, indorsed by the solicitor with a memorandum to that effect, in the form following:—

"All parties are sui juris.

"A. B., plaintiff's solicitor.
"1st March, 1860."

Causes for further Consideration.

(Cons. Ord. 21, rule 10).

9. Causes for further consideration are to be set down after the expiration of eight days and within fourteen days from the filing of the chief clerk's certificate, upon production of the written request of the plaintiff or party having the conduct of the cause; and, after the expiration of the fourteen days, upon production of the written request of the solicitor for the plaintiff, or any other party desiring to have the same set down; and in either case upon production of the decree or order adjourning further consideration, or an office copy thereof, and an office copy of the chief clerk's certificate, or a memorandum of the date when such certificate was filed, indorsed on the request by the Clerk of Reports. The request may be in the form following; that is to say—

"In Chancery.

"A. v. B.

"I request that this cause, the further consideration whereof was adjourned by order of the — day of —, may be set down for further consideration before his Honor the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley.

"C. D.,

"Plaintiff's [or defendant's] solicitor.
"1st March, 1880."

Marking Causes and Motions for Decree "Short."

(Cons. Ord. 21, rule 10).

10. Causes for original hearing or further consideration, and motions for a decree, may be marked "short" on production of the certificate of the plaintiff's counsel that the cause or motion is fit to be so heard, without the consent of the solicitors for any of the defendants; but will not be so marked, in the case of causes for original hearing, for any day before the day when the subpoena to hear judgment is returnable; or in the case of causes for further consideration, until after the expiration of ten days; or in the case of motions for decree, for any day before the day for which the notice of motion is given; unless in either case by consent of all parties.

Appeal Motions.

11. Appeal motions are to be set down at least two clear days before the day for which the notice is given, upon production of the order appealed from, or an office copy thereof, and a copy of the notice of motion, which is to be filed.

(Cons. Ord. 31, rules 4, 5).

12. Petitions for a rehearing before either of the Vice-Chancellors, or before the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices, and petitions of appeal, are to be set down upon an order to be drawn up by the registrar, pursuant to the fiat of the Lord Chancellor inscribed on the petition, and upon payment of the usual deposit. Petitions for a rehearing before the Master of the Rolls are to be set down upon an order drawn up by his secretary, and upon payment of the usual deposit. All petitions of appeal or rehearing are to be marked in the cause book as not to be in the paper for hearing before the expiration of six clear days from the day of setting down.

13. Upon production to the registrar of a request or consent signed by the solicitors of all parties, at the latest in the forenoon of the day before the day the cause is to be in the paper, it will be marked as standing over to a day to be named. If all parties do not consent, application should be made to the Court for that purpose at the latest in the forenoon of the day before the day the cause is to be in the paper; otherwise, if the cause be placed in the paper and called on, it may be struck out, and in that case it must be again set down at the bottom of the list.

14. Where an unopposed petition is directed to stand over, without fixing a day for it to be again put into the paper, the registrar in attendance in court, upon the written request of the solicitor, will direct the same to be restored to the paper for the following petition day.

DOCUMENTS TO BE LEFT ON BESPEAKING DECREES OR ORDERS.

Generally.

15. Any documents or evidence required to be produced to the Court should be left with the registrar on bespeaking the decree or order.

Whenever any Fund in Court is to be dealt with.

16. The Accountant-General's certificate, and, if the funds are restrained by any order, the restraining order, or an office copy thereof.

Where Payment out of Court is ordered to legal personal Representatives.

17. The probate or letters of administration, stamped for a sufficient amount.

Legacy or Succession Duty.

18. Orders for payment of specified sums to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, for legacy and succession duty, will not be drawn up until the calculation has been examined at the legacy and succession duty department, and a certificate obtained of the proper amount payable for duty.

Reference to the Record.

(Cons. Ord. 1, rule 48).

19. If the decree or order is made in a cause commenced subsequently to the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852, the reference to the record is to be either inscribed or stamped upon some document in the cause, or upon the brief. If the decree or order is made in a cause commenced prior to the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852, a memorandum or certificate is to be indorsed and signed by the solicitor on the brief, in the form following; that is to say—

"I certify that this cause was commenced previously to the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852."

(Cons. Ord. 39, rules 2, 3—Regulation 3—Art. 3).

20. If the fees of court are payable according to the lower scale, (except on orders on petition or summons, other than summons originating proceedings in chambers), a copy of the certificate for paying the lower scale of court fees, duly marked by the Clerk of Records and Writs.

In all Cases of Non-appearances.

21. If any party or person served does not appear at the hearing, an affidavit of service on such party or person.

DECREES.

22. Counsel's brief, and a print of the bill, with the reference to the record marked thereon, and the correct title of the cause, with the names of the guardians of any infant defendants inserted.

In addition to the printed copy of the bill to be left for the use of the judge previously to the hearing of all causes and motions for a decree, a printed copy of the bill is, by direction of the Lord Chancellor, to be left with the usher of the judge, for the use of the registrar in attendance in court. In case a correct printed copy of the bill shall have been so left, it will not be necessary to leave another printed copy of the bill on bespeaking the decree.

If any Admissions are to be entered as read.

(Cons. Ord. 1, rule 44).

23. The original paper of admissions, signed by the parties or their solicitors, to be indorsed by the registrar. The admissions, when so indorsed, are to be filed in the Report Office, before the decree is left to be passed.

and a memorandum thereof is to be made on the decree by the Clerk of Reports.

If a Memorandum has been entered of Service of a Copy of the Bill on any Defendant.

24. The order to enter the memorandum of service with the Record and Writ Clerk's certificate of the entry thereof, and of no appearance by the defendant so served.

If a Traversing Note has been filed, and the Defendant does not appear at the Hearing.

25. The Record and Writ Clerk's certificate that the note has been filed, an affidavit of service of a copy of the note, and of subpoena to hear judgment.

If the Bill has been taken pro Confesso.

26. The order for the Record and Writ Clerk to attend at the hearing with the record of the bill, and any previous orders as to the contempt.

If any Affidavits have been read at the Hearing.

27. The office copies of such affidavits, and any exhibits therein referred to.

*If any Documents have been proved at the Hearing, Vid Voce or by Affidavit.*

28. The order authorising them to be so proved, with the office copies of the affidavits, if any, and the documents proved.

ORDERS ON FURTHER CONSIDERATION.

29. Counsel's brief, the original decree or the last order on further consideration, and any subsequent orders to revive or carry on the proceedings, and the office copy of the chief clerk's certificate, and office copies of any affidavits, and any exhibits or other evidence used at the hearing.

If the Order deals with any Purchase Money.

30. A consent brief for the purchaser, or an affidavit of notice to him of the intended application of the purchase money, and that the conveyance has been executed and delivered to him.

ORDERS ON MOTIONS.

31. Counsel's brief, with his indorsement of the order made; the notice of motion, if any, annexed, and office copies of any affidavits, and any exhibits or other evidence used at the hearing of the motion.

ORDERS ON PETITION.

32. The original petition and counsel's brief, with his indorsement of the order made, and any decree, order, or the office copy of any certificate on which the petition is founded, and office copies of any affidavits, and any exhibits or other evidence used at the hearing.

Under the Settled Estates Act.

33. In addition to the documents mentioned in regulation 32, the newspapers containing the advertisement of the petition, and any interlocutory orders that may have been made relating thereto.

(Cons. Ord. 34, rule 3).

34. Where the order deals with any money paid into court by the promoters of any public undertaking, to the credit of such undertaking, not standing to any separate account, the Accountant-General's certificate of the payment into court of the sum sought to be dealt with, and also the Accountant-General's certificate of the fund in court to the credit of the undertaking; and when the order directs the carrying over of the money to a separate account, or payment of the same out of court to any person entitled thereto, an affidavit of the petitioner verifying the petition, and negating any adverse right or claim, in the terms of the Cons. Ord. 34, rule 3, and any other evidence used at the hearing.

Orders for winding up Companies.

35. In addition to the documents mentioned in regulation 32, the affidavit of the service of the petition, and the London Gazette and newspapers containing the advertisement thereof.

ORDERS VACATING RECEIVER'S RECOGNISANCES.

36. An office copy of the receiver's recognisance from the office of the Clerk of Inrolments.

FEES AND STAMPS.

37. Where a fee of less than 3*l.* is payable on any decree or order, such fee will be payable by affixed stamps, and the stamp affixed to the decree or order is to be of an amount corresponding as nearly as practicable with the amount of the stamp which it requires, so that no greater number of adhesive stamps may be affixed thereto than is actually necessary; and solicitors are requested not to cancel any adhesive stamps affixed to decrees and orders drawn up by the registrars, as such stamps will be cancelled by the registrar on passing the decree or order.

DECREES OR ORDERS INGROSSED ON IMPRESSED STAMPS TO BE CANCELLED IF NOT DULY PAID FOR.

38. When a decree or order ingrossed on an impressed stamp is not paid for within one calendar month from the day on which such decree or order is ingrossed, it will be cancelled, and the stamp recovered as spoiled; and in case the party shall afterwards desire to have the decree or order ingrossed, he will be required to pay the stationer's charges for the same.

Note.—Solicitors and their clerks, on bespeaking or applying respecting orders made in any ex parte matter, are requested to inquire for the same by the title thereof as it appeared in the Court Paper. Decrees and Orders drawn up by the registrars will, when entered, be delivered to the solicitor having the carriage thereof, with his papers, by the assistant clerks to the registrars.

REGISTRARS' CERTIFICATES OF SALE, TRANSFER, OR DELIVERY.

39. Every certificate for sale, transfer, or delivery of any stocks, funds, shares, or securities, before being submitted to the registrar for signature, is to be examined by one of the registrars' clerks at the order of course seat, who is to mark the same as examined, and sign his initials at the foot, in the left-hand margin thereof, thus:—

Ex<sup>d</sup>. A. B.

Certificates under the Cons. Ord. 1, rule 8.

40. The registrars, previously to issuing certificates for the transfer or delivery of stocks, funds, shares, or securities, pursuant to the Cons. Ord. 1, rule 8, will require the following evidence to be produced; and the affidavits of identity may be in the forms given in Cases 1, 2, and 3, according to the circumstances:—

Case 1.

If the order direct such transfer or delivery to the legal personal representatives of a deceased person named in the order, but without naming such representatives in the order, and any of such representatives be dead, leaving survivors or a survivor, the probate or letters of administration of the deceased person named in the order, a certificate of the burial of the deceased representative, or an official extract from the register of deaths, of his death, and an affidavit of his identity.

Case 2.

If the order direct such transfer or delivery to any persons named in the order as the legal personal representatives of a deceased person, and any of such representatives be dead, leaving survivors or a survivor, a certificate of the burial of such deceased representative, or an official extract from the register of deaths, of his death, and an affidavit of his identity.

Case 3.

If the order direct such transfer or delivery to any person named in the order, or his legal personal representatives, and such person be dead, the probate or letters of administration, a certificate of the burial of such deceased person, or an official extract from the register of deaths, of his death, and an affidavit of his identity; and if any of the legal personal representatives be also dead, leaving survivors or a survivor, the further evidence mentioned in Case 1.

Form of Affidavit in Case 1.

I, [the deponent], of &c., make oath and say, that I was well acquainted with A. B., deceased, and that he was the person to whom the probate of the will [or, letters of administration of the effects] of C. D., deceased, the person named in the order dated the — day of —, was [or, were] granted by her Majesty's Court of Probate, [or as the case may be], on the — day of —, jointly with E. F. and G. H., which probate, [or, letters of administration], marked X, is [or, are] now produced and shewn to me; and that the said A. B. is also the person named in the certificate of burial [or, official extract from the register of deaths] hereunto annexed.

Form of Affidavit in Case 2.

I, [the deponent], of &c., make oath and say, that I was well acquainted with A. B., deceased, the person named in the order, dated the — day of —, as one of the legal personal representatives of C. D., deceased; and that the said A. B. is also the person named in the certificate of burial [or, official extract from the register of deaths] hereunto annexed.

Form of Affidavit in Case 3.

I, [the deponent], of &c., make oath and say, that I was well acquainted with A. B., deceased, the person named in the order dated &c., and late of &c., [following description in probate or administration], and that probate of the will [or, letters of administration of the effects] of the said A. B. was [or, were] granted by her Majesty's Court of Probate, [or as the case may be], on the — day of —, to C. D. and E. F., which probate, [or, letters of administration], marked X, is [or, are] now produced and shewn to me; and that the said A. B. is also the person named in the certificate of burial [or, official extract from the register of deaths] hereunto annexed.

Note.—If the person named in the order be dead, and any of his legal personal representatives be also dead, leaving survivors or a survivor, the forms in Cases 3 and 1 should be combined and adapted.

An affidavit made by or before an executor or administrator will not be received.

Form of Certificate of Transfer to the Representative of a Person named in an Order, but since deceased.

To the Accountant-General } of the Court of Chancery. } Short Title.

Pursuant to an order, dated &c., the first of the Consolidated Orders, rule 8, an affidavit of &c., filed the — day of —, the certificate of the burial of A. B., in the said order named, and the probate of the will [or, letters of administration of the effects] of the said A. B., granted on the — day of —, to E. F. and G. H., by the Court of Probate, [or as the case may be], £—, Bank 3l. per Cent. Annuities, standing &c., are to be transferred to the said E. F. and G. H.

CECIL MONRO, Senior Registrar.

ORDER OF COURT.

WHEREAS, from the present state of the business before the Lord Chancellor and Master of the Rolls respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes set down before the Lord Chancellor to be heard before the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley and the Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood should be transferred to the Master of the Rolls' book of causes for hearing: now I do hereby, at the request of the Master of the Rolls, order that the several causes set forth in the schedules hereunto subjoined be accordingly transferred from the book of causes of the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley and of the Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood respectively to that of the Master of the Rolls; and I do further order, that all causes so to be transferred (although the bills in such causes may have been marked for the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley or the Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, under the Orders of Court of the 5th May, 1837, and notwithstanding any orders therein made by the Vice-Chancellors Sir R. T. Kindersley or Sir W. P. Wood respectively, or their respective predecessors) shall hereafter be considered and taken as causes originally marked for the Master of the Rolls, and be subject to the same regulations as all causes marked for the Master of the Rolls are subject to by the same Orders: provided, nevertheless, that no order made by the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley, or the Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, or their predecessors, in any such causes, shall be varied or reversed otherwise than by the Lord Chancellor or the Lords Justices.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

LAW OF PROPERTY BILL.

(As amended on Report in the House of Lords.)

1. Whereas it is desirable to place freehold, copyhold, and customary estates on the same footing with leasehold estates, in respect of judgments, statutes, and recognisances, as against purchasers and mortgagees, and also to enable purchasers and mortgagees of estates, whether freehold, copyhold, or customary or leasehold, to ascertain when execution has issued on any judgment, &c., and to protect them against delay in the execution of the writ: be it therefore enacted, that no judgment, &c. shall affect any land, of whatever tenure, as to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, or a mortgagee, (whether such purchaser or mortgagee have notice or not of any such judgment, &c.), unless a writ or other due process of execution of such judgment, &c. shall have been issued and registered as hereinafter is mentioned before the execution of the conveyance or mortgage to him, and the payment of the purchase or mortgage money by him; but as to judgments, &c. already entered up, the same shall be binding on purchasers and mortgagees, as far as by law they were binding on them before the passing of this act, if any writ of execution or other process issued thereon at any time before the 1st November, 1860, be registered as hereinafter mentioned on or before that day: provided always, that no judgment, &c., nor any writ of execution or other process thereon, shall affect any land, of whatever tenure, as to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee, although execution or other process shall have issued thereon, and have been duly registered, unless such execution or other process shall be executed and put in force within three calendar months from the time when it was registered.

2. Relates to the mode of registering.

3. Protection of heirs and executors against unregistered judgments.

4. Judgments as against heirs and executors to be re-registered.

5. In the construction of the previous provisions the term "judgment" shall be taken to include registered decrees, orders of courts of equity and bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment.

6. No purchaser for valuable consideration, or mortgagee, shall be bound by any implied or constructive notice of any charge, or of anything affecting the title to the property purchased or taken in mortgage, unless the court shall be of opinion that the conduct of such purchaser or mortgagee amounted to fraud.

7. Where any actual waiver of the benefit of any covenant or condition in any lease on the part of any lessor, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be proved to have taken place after the passing of this act in any one particular instance, such actual waiver shall not be assumed or deemed to extend to any instance, or any breach of covenant or condition, other than that to which such waiver shall specially relate, nor to be a general waiver of the benefit of any such covenant or condition, unless an intention to that effect shall appear.

8. Provision for cases of future and contingent uses.

9. Sect. 24 of stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, extended to mortgagees.

10. In taxing the costs of preparing abstracts of title, where unnecessary length is complained of, the Taxing Master shall not treat the 24th section of stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, as authorising or requiring any information in regard to title which would not have been justified by the practice of solicitors acting bona fide before the passing of the said act, the provision of the said section having been directed against fraud only.

11. Where any trustee, executor, or administrator shall apply for the opinion, advice, or direction of a judge of the Court of Chancery, under the 30th section of stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the petition or statement shall state the facts concisely, and shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and such petition or statement shall be signed by counsel, and the judge by whom it is to be answered may require the petitioner or applicant to attend him by counsel, either in chambers or in court, where he deems it necessary to have the assistance of counsel.

12. Sect. 32 of the said stat. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, is hereby repealed.

13. Act not to extend to Scotland.

THE COURT OF PROBATE, AND COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MARCH 31, 1860.

THE Imperial Court of Paris has lately decided that no action lies for defamation of a deceased person at the suit of members of his family. This decision has recalled to us a conversation between Boswell and Johnson upon the subject. "I mentioned," says Boswell*, "Mr. Maclaurin's uneasiness on account of a degree of ridicule carelessly thrown on his deceased father in Goldsmith's 'History of Animated Nature,' in which that celebrated mathematician is represented as being subject to fits of yawning so violent as to render him incapable of proceeding in his lecture—a story altogether unfounded, but for the publication of which the law would give no reparation. This led us to agitate the question, whether legal redress could be obtained even when a man's deceased relative was calumniated in a publication. Mr. Murray maintained that there should be reparation, unless the author could justify himself by proving the fact. Johnson—'Sir, it is of so much more consequence that truth should be told than that individuals should not be made uneasy, that it is much better that the law does not restrain writing freely concerning the characters of the dead. Damages will be given to a man who is calumniated in his lifetime, because he may be hurt in his worldly interest, or at least hurt in his mind; but the law does not regard that uneasiness which a man feels on having his ancestor calumniated. That is too nice. Let him deny what is said, and let the matter have a fair chance by discussion. But if a man could say nothing against a character but what he can prove, history could not be written; for a great deal is known of men of which proof cannot be brought. A minister may be notoriously known to take bribes, and yet you may not be able to prove it.' Mr. Murray suggested that the author should be obliged to shew some sort of evidence, though he would not require a strict legal proof; but Johnson firmly and resolutely opposed any restraint whatever, as adverse to a free investigation of the characters of mankind." Boswell, confounding the distinction between civil and criminal proceedings, adds, in a note—"What Dr. Johnson has here said is undoubtedly good sense, yet I am afraid that law, though defined by Lord Coke 'the perfection of reason,' is not altogether with him; for it is held in the books, that an attack on the reputation even of a dead man may be punished as a libel, because tending to a breach of the peace. There is, however, I believe, no modern decided case to that effect. In the King's Bench, Trinity Term, 1790, the question occurred on occasion of an indictment, The King v. Topham, who, as proprietor of a newspaper intitled 'The World,' was found guilty of a libel against Earl Cowper, deceased, because certain injurious charges against his Lordship were published in that paper. An arrest of judgment having been moved for, the case was afterwards solemnly argued. My friend Mr. Const, whom I delight to have an opportunity to praise, not only for his abilities, but his manners—a gentleman whose ancient German blood has been mellowed in England, and may be truly said to unite the baron and the barrister—was one of the counsel for Mr. Topham. He displayed much learning and ingenuity upon the general question, which, however, was not decided, as the Court granted an arrest, chiefly on the informality of the indictment."

In 2 Starkie on Slander and Libel, 212, 2nd ed., the law upon this question is thus stated:—"An indictment lies for a libel reflecting upon the memory of a person who is dead, if it be published with the malevolent purpose to injure his family and posterity, and to expose them to contempt and disgrace; for the chief cause of punishing offences of this nature is their tendency to a breach of the peace; and although the party be dead at the time of publishing the libel, yet (according to Lord Coke) it stirs up others of the same family, blood, or society, to revenge and to break the peace. (5 Rep. 125; Hawk. Pl. Cr., c. 73, ss. 1, 3; Rea v. Walter, 2 Esp. 61). In the case of The King v. Oriskany (4 T. R. 129, in notis) an information was granted against the defendant for publishing the following libel upon Sir C. Gaunter Nicoll, Lady Dartmouth's father, and on the Government:—"On Saturday evening died, of the small-pox, Sir C. G. Nicoll, Knight of the most honourable Order of the Bath, and representative in Parliament of the borough of Peterborough. He could not be called a friend to his country, for he changed his principles for a red riband, and voted for that pernicious project, the excise." But, as was observed by Lord Kenyon, C. J., in the case of The King v. Topham, (4 T. R. 129), "To say that the conduct of a dead person can at no time be canvassed—to hold that even after ages are past the conduct of bad men cannot be contrasted with that of the good—would be to exclude the most useful part of history." The malicious intention of the defendant, therefore, to injure the family and posterity of the deceased must be expressly averred, and clearly proved."

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.

In this number of THE JURIST is given as full an abstract of the Bankruptcy Bill as our limits will admit. In passing from the Attorney-General's speech on the bill to the bill itself, we encountered such a shock as we have often felt on turning from some forensic flight of the same successful advocate to the evidence in the cause. The measure was well designed, the advocate was well crammed, and he delivered himself of his cram in a most effective manner; but the promoters of the bill have so egregiously failed in their choice of a draftsman, that we cannot believe it to be possible to pass the bill until it has been entirely redrawn, even though, by an inversion of the usual fate of bills, it should be amended in committee. Amended it cannot fail to be if it suffer any change. The bill is a conglomeration of fragments from the Consolidation Act of 1849 (which we now see is by no means the worst drawn of all possible acts) and the Insolvent Debtors Act; clauses probably drawn by the gentlemen who have suggested the various alterations they are intended to effect, (and these, though incomplete and inartistic, are easily recognised as the work of thinking men); and, lastly, clauses drawn to order by the hand that has tossed the whole mess of 538 sections and 11 schedules (filling 150 folio pages) into its present amorphous condition.

If the gentlemen who undertook to get the bill drawn despaired of finding a man gifted with the rare ability to draw an act of Parliament well, or, having found him; were unable to tempt him with the miserable fee which our Government is in the habit of offering for such work, they might surely have found in some individual the not uncommon gifts of a moderate knowledge of the use of language, some theoretical and a little practical familiarity with bankruptcy law, and conscientious industry, combined with the accident of such a deficiency of profitable employment as would render even the meagre Treasury allowance acceptable. We have not space for any detailed criticism of this miserable bill, but a few specimens, selected at random, must be given to justify our condemnation.

After clauses defining the procedure to obtain adjudication of bankruptcy on the petition of a creditor, and on the petition of the debtor, we come to a clause containing these words:—"In the computation of debts for the purpose of any petition under this act, there shall not be reckoned, 1, the amount of the debts in respect of which the petitioner has already taken the benefit of insolvency, protection, or bankruptcy; 2, debts barred by any Statute of Limitations." We have a faint suspicion that this clause is intended to refer exclusively to petitions by debtors; and by so limiting it we should avoid the difficult problem of determining when a creditor has "taken the benefit of insolvency, protection, or bankruptcy." But when has a debtor taken the benefit of insolvency, of protection, or of bankruptcy? As we have hitherto, without any enactment, excluded debts barred by the Statute of Limitations, and also all other claims which the Courts, acting in analogy to that statute, refuse to enforce, from proof in bankruptcy, for any purpose, the express provision which forms the second member of the above clause could serve no other purpose than to imply that for any other purpose than that of supporting a petition, debts barred by the statute may be proved, and that, for any purpose, claims not within the statute, but only barred by analogy, may be proved.

Here is a specimen of style:—"If upon such examination it shall appear that the creditors' assignee has kept in his hands, at any time during the space of one week, more than the sum of 50*l.* belonging to the estate, the creditors may, upon establishing such fact to the satisfaction of the Court, and if the assignee shall not shew cause to the contrary, debit such assignee with interest for the amount so kept, at any rate not exceeding 20*l.* per cent. by the year, for the time such monies were kept in his hands."

It would be worth while to pass this clause, in order to see what would be the consequences of "debiting" the assignee with interest. We can imagine the Court saying to the assignee, "Sir, you are debited with interest on this sum;" and the assignee replying, "Very well, sir; what then?"

By sect. 381 the Court is authorised to make an order vesting the bankrupt's copyholds in any person without admittance, and without payment of any fees or a fine; and by sect. 383 the lord, or his steward, or steward's deputy, is bound to enter the vesting order on the rolls gratis.

Sect. 158 coolly abolishes the remedy of every creditor to recover his debt by action at law, for it makes the levying of a judgment debt by seizure and sale an act of bankruptcy, upon which, at any time within a year, a petition in bankruptcy may be presented, with the effect of defeating the title of the purchaser from the sheriff, and of obliging the creditor to refund the proceeds of the sale, if the sheriff has been so regardless of his own security as to pay them over to him. But the draftsman, not content with defeating every execution actually levied by seizure and sale, takes care, in sect. 251, to import from the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, a provision, that after adjudication no judgment creditor shall proceed to a seizure or sale; and by another independent clause (sect. 245) he provides that an execution levied sixty days before the filing of the petition shall be unavailable.

In sect. 236 we have the reputed ownership clause from the act of 1849, under which the goods do not vest in the assignee, but may be sold by the Court. In sect. 246 we have a reputed ownership clause, which vests them in the assignee.

Sect. 254 exempts sales in bankruptcy from auction duty.

Sect. 247 invalidates, as a fraudulent preference, every payment made by a debtor to any creditor, on account of his claim, within sixty days before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, unless the payment was made for a reasonable and sufficient consideration, given at the time! So that no one who asks for payment of his debt, and obtains it, can during the next two months call the money his own; and what would formerly have been set aside as a fraudulent preference will be protected if sixty days elapse before the filing of the petition. The framer of this clause was probably dreaming of the 59th section of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

The words "or any of such matters," in the 224th section of the act of 1849, (relating to arrangements by deed), which gave rise to the conflicting decisions in Tetley v. Taylor (1 El. & Bl. 521) and Drew v. Collins, (6 Exch. 670), and were, in effect, struck out of the act by the ultimate decision in Tetley v. Taylor, are reproduced in sect. 303 of the present bill, with a somewhat different context; so that one may expect to have a second course of litigation in order to strike them out again.

No deed of arrangement is to bind non-executing creditors unless it is executed by three-fourths of the creditors and by the trustees within seven days after the execution of the deed by the debtor. It will not do to postpone the execution by the debtor until the other signatures have been obtained; he must execute first, and within the next seven days three-fourths of his creditors in England, Ireland, Scotland, Canada, India, or Australia, must execute. (There is an exemption from this condition as to creditors in a foreign country, if the deed is an assignment in a prescribed form. Sect. 401.) We shall need a sealing as well as a writing telegraph.

By sect. 394, no deed, by which a debtor makes an arrangement with his creditors, or any person on their behalf, touching the inspection or winding up of his affairs and estate, shall be valid "or good in law," unless it is registered in the Court of Bankruptcy within fourteen days after execution by the debtor; and the registration is to set out the date, and the names and descriptions of the parties to the deed; and all these particulars are to be published in the London Gazette!

Of course the draftsman has not thought it necessary to say whether this impertinent interference is to be confined to arrangements between a debtor and all his creditors, (in which case it would be absolutely senseless), or to arrangements with a majority of the creditors.

But the greatest curiosity is the 398th section, which gives to any such deed as is mentioned in sect. 394 the effect of bankruptcy, and by mere force of the deed, and without proof, places the creditors in the position of creditors who have proved their debts; while the next section makes the deed a summary protection against process.

We recommend such of our readers as desire any further proof of the draftsman's incapacity to collate the marginal abstracts of the clauses with the clauses themselves.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.—March 20, 1880.

1. All petitions, summonses, statements, affidavits, and other written proceedings under the 30th section of the said act, shall be intituled "In the matter of the said act, and in the matter of the particular trust, will, or administration;" and every such petition and statement shall be marked in manner directed by the 6th of the Consolidated General Orders, rule 6; and every such petition or statement shall state the facts concisely, and shall be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively; and every such summons shall, except as to its title, be in the form of the general summons in Schedule (K.), No. 1, subjoined to the Consolidated General Orders.

2. At the time when any such summons is sealed, the statement upon which the same is grounded shall be left at the chambers of the judge, and shall, on the conclusion of the proceeding, be transmitted to the registrar by the chief clerk, with the minutes of the opinion, advice, or direction given by the judge; and the registrar shall cause such statement to be transmitted to the Report Office, to be there filed.

3. Every such petition or summons shall be served seven clear days before the hearing thereof, unless the person served shall consent to a shorter time.

4. The opinion, advice, or direction of the judge shall be passed and entered, and remain as of record, in the same manner as any order made by the court or judge, and the same shall be termed "a judicial opinion," or "judicial advice," or "judicial direction," as the case may be.

5. The fees of court, and the fees and allowances to solicitors, on proceedings under the 30th section of the said act, shall be the same as are now payable under the Consolidated General Orders 38 and 39, and by the practice of the Court for business of a similar nature.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL.

(THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL).

Abstract of a Bill to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Bankruptcy and Insolvency in England.

Sect. 1 Commencement of act, 11th October, 1880.

2. Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy in London released.

3 to 5. Commissioners of the Insolvent Debtors Court released.

6 to 19. The Court of Bankruptcy. Single judge. London District Court and commissioner.

20 to 40. Country districts, (Manchester, Leeds, Liverpool, Birmingham, Exeter, and Newcastle). District commissioners. Transfer of jurisdiction on vacancies to county court judges. Power to create additional county courts.

41 to 49. Jurisdiction above 300*l*. probable assets, in chief court. Under 300*l*. in London district court. Above 300*l*. in country district court. Under 300*l*. in county court. Appeal.

50 to 60. Practice and procedure of the court. Judges to sit at chambers. Registrars to sit in chambers. Questions by consent. Jury.

70 to 82. Officers of the court. Registrars. Bailiffs of county courts.

83, 84. Abolition of office of accountant. Substitution of chief registrar.

85 to 88. The Taxing Master. Settlement of bills of auctioneers, valuers, and accountants. Deputy. Registrar in country districts to be taxing officer.

89 to 102. Official assignees. Remuneration 800*l*. per annum, and further amount in each case to be allowed by judge. Limit.

103. Office of messenger abolished.

104 to 107. Vacancies. Temporary officers.

139 to 148. Winding up of matters now depending in the court. Buildings.

149 to 151. Abolition of distinction between trader and non-trader. Aliens. Privilege of Parliament.

152 to 169.—Acts of Bankruptcy.

152. Departing the realm, outlawry, fraudulent arrest, attachment, execution, conveyance, surrender, gift, delivery, or transfer.

153. No deed or instrument by which a debtor shall convey, or shall covenant or agree to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, to a trustee or trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, shall be deemed fraudulent, provided the several conditions be observed which are required in and by the 393rd section of this act. If any one of such several conditions shall not be observed or performed, the deed or assignment shall be void, and the execution thereof shall be an act of bankruptcy by the debtor.

154 to 157. Provision may be made in deed for allowance to the debtor, as in bankruptcy. Lying in prison, and escaping out of prison. Compounding with petitioning creditor. Filing a declaration of insolvency.

158. If any execution shall be levied by seizure and sale of any of the goods and chattels of any debtor, upon any judgment recovered in any action personal for the recovery of any debt or money demand in any court of record against any debtor, every debtor shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy from the date of the seizure of such goods and chattels. (See sect. 244).

159. Filing a declaration of insolvency in the foreign dominions of the Crown.

160. Judgment creditor entitled to charge the debtor in execution may, after one week from the signing of judgment, sue out a judgment debtor summons, requiring debtor to appear and be examined respecting his ability to satisfy the debt.

161. Non-payment of money under decree or order of a court of equity, or an order in bankruptcy, or insolvency, or lunacy, within a week after service of peremptory order, fixing a day for payment, entitles creditor to a judgment debtor summons.

162. The judgment debtor summons shall, unless the court shall in any case otherwise direct, issue, according to the following rules:—

Where the debtor is in England, then, in case the debt exceeds 40*l*., (exclusive of costs), out of the Court of Bankruptcy for the district in which the debtor usually lives, or, at the time of the issuing of the summons, happens to be; in other cases, out of that court, or the county court for the same district, at the option of the creditor:

Where the debtor is not in England, then, in case the debt exceeds 40*l*., (exclusive of costs), out of the Court of Bankruptcy for the district in which is the debtor's usual or last known place of abode in England; in other cases, out of that court, or the county court for the same district, at the option of the creditor.

163. Where the debtor is in England the summons shall be served personally, unless the court shall in any case direct that service in some other manner shall be good service: where the debtor is not in England, the court, upon such evidence as shall satisfy it in what place or country he is or may probably be found, may order service on him in such place or country, or within such limit and in such manner and form as shall seem fit.

164 to 169. Duplicate of summons to sheriff. Where service cannot be personally made. Procedure upon appearance of debtor. Examination of debtor. Adjudication of bankruptcy on summons. Time to shew cause against adjudication. Debtor refusing to conform may be committed.

170 to 176. Debtor summons in respect of bill of exchange or promissory note. Option to deposit amount of bill pending action. Deposition of good defence. Order to stay proceedings at hearing. Adjudication of bankruptcy. Where acceptor is keeping out of the way.

176. No person liable upon an act of bankruptcy committed more than twelve months before filing petition.

Procedure to obtain Adjudication.

177 to 191. Proceedings to be by petition. Effect of petition. Amount of petitioning creditor's debt; single creditor 40*l.*, two creditors 60*l.*, three or more creditors 100*l.* If bankruptcy be fraudulently or maliciously prosecuted, court may order satisfaction. Debtor may petition against himself. 192 to 219. Proceedings under adjudication.

221 to 224.—Procedure after Adjudication.

221. It shall be the duty of the official assignee, immediately after adjudication, by examination of the bankrupt personally, and of his books and accounts, to ascertain the persons who are creditors of the bankrupt, and to give notice by the general post to such creditors of the first meeting of creditors.

222. At the time of adjudication the court shall appoint a meeting of the creditors, of which seven days' notice shall be given in the London Gazette, and which meeting shall be held at such time and place as the court shall appoint, having regard to the residences of the major part of the creditors.

225 to 235. Examination of bankrupt, &c.

Power of Court over certain Property.

236 to 239. Goods in order and disposition. Power of court over certain conveyances, &c. made by bankrupt. Court may proceed when the bankrupt by fraud makes himself accountable to the Crown. Where bankrupt beneficially entitled to stock, court may make order for transfer.

240. All goods and chattels of any bankrupt which shall at the filing of the petition be under seizure by virtue of any attachment shall, upon demand, be delivered up by all persons having the custody of the same to the official or creditors' assignee, as the case may be, and the court may make order accordingly.

241 to 243. Bankrupt trustee. Titles to property sold not to be impeached, unless proceedings instituted. The court, after adjudication, may order any treasurer, &c. or agent of the bankrupt, to deliver all monies, &c.

244 to 249.—Transactions affected or not affected by Bankruptcy.

244. What payments, &c. by bankrupt valid. [This is identical with the 139*th* section of the act of 1849.]

245. If any attachment, sequestration, or execution be issued against any bankrupt, by virtue whereof his estate and effects, or any of them, may be attached, sequestered, or taken in execution at any time within sixty days next before the filing of the petition, such attachment, &c. shall be void, in favour of the assignee, as against the attaching &c. creditor, except that such creditor shall, if the attachment, &c. would have been valid but for this provision, be entitled to retain out of any money already realised his costs of suit, and of the attachment, &c., or to proceed with such attachment, &c. for the purpose of realising such costs; but on satisfaction of such costs, or on tender of the amount thereof by the assignee to the creditor, it shall be lawful for the assignee to recover from such creditor the property so attached &c., or the residue thereof, or the proceeds thereof, as the case may be.

246. If any bankrupt shall have made or caused to be made any transfer of any of his goods or chattels, and the person entitled under such transfer shall not have taken possession of such goods and chattels, but shall have allowed them, or any portion of them, to remain in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, as reputed owner thereof, such transfer shall, as to such goods and chattels, or any portion of them, so in the possession and reputed ownership of the bankrupt at the time of such petition, be deemed a secret transfer, and the said goods and chattels, or remaining portion of them, shall be deemed to be part of the estate of the bankrupt, and shall vest in his assignee under his appointment.

247. Any payment made by any bankrupt; or by any person on his behalf, and any transfer so made or caused to be made by any bankrupt, or by any person on his behalf, of any of his goods or chattels, within sixty days next before the filing of the petition, not being for a reasonable and sufficient consideration given or agreed to be given at the time, to any creditor of such bankrupt, or to any person in trust for, or to or for the use, benefit, and advantage of, such creditor, shall be deemed a fraudulent preference of such creditor, and such payment, delivery, or transfer shall not be available to the creditor as against the assignee, but he shall be paid rateably with the other creditors, and the full amount of such payment made, and the goods and chattels delivered, or their full value, shall be forthcoming to and recoverable by the assignee from such creditor.

248. Any conveyance or equitable mortgage made and executed or given by any bankrupt within sixty days next before the filing of the petition, not being for a reasonable and sufficient consideration given or agreed to be given at the time, or in pursuance of an agreement in writing made at the time, of contracting an antecedent debt, and producible under the adjudication, and the bankrupt being at the time of making and executing or granting the same unable to meet his engagements, shall be deemed a fraudulent preference of the creditor to whom, or in trust for whom, or to or for the use, benefit, or advantage of whom, such conveyance or mortgage shall have been made and executed or granted, and shall not be available to him as against the assignee; but such creditor shall be paid rateably with the other creditors, and the property conveyed or charged, or the full value thereof, shall be forthcoming to or recoverable by the assignee from such creditor, or from the person to whom the same shall, in trust for him, or to his use, benefit, or advantage, have been conveyed or mortgaged, or from any person to whom such creditor or such trustee shall have conveyed or mortgaged the same, such person having at the time of such conveyance or mortgage notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt.

249. Bona fide purchases more than a year before petition protected.

250. Certain warrants of attorney, cognovits, and consents to judge's order, given within sixty days of filing petition, to be null and void.

251. In all cases where any bankrupt shall at any time previously to the filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy by or against such bankrupt have executed any warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or shall have given any cognovit actionem or bill of sale, whether for a valuable consideration or otherwise, no person shall, after the adjudication of bankruptcy of such bankrupt, avail himself of any execution or sequestration issued or to be issued upon such judgment obtained or to be obtained upon such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or of such bill of sale, either by seizure and sale or sequestration of the property of such bankrupt, or any part thereof, or by sale of such property theretofore seized, or any part thereof; but any person to whom any sum or sums of money shall be due in respect of any such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or of such bill of sale, shall and may prove as a creditor for the same under this act.

252. Warrants of attorney and cognovits given by any debtor to be void, unless filed within twenty-one days.

253. Judge's order obtained by consent given by any debtor defendant to be void, unless filed within twenty-one days.

254. Deeds and instruments relating to bankruptcy not liable to stamp duty. ["And no sale of any real or personal estate of any bankrupt shall be liable to any auction duty."] —

255 to 295. Creditors' assignees, when and how chosen. Joint creditor entitled to prove under separate estate for choice of assignee. Confirmation by court. Election of creditors' assignee after a previous election declared void. Security. Remuneration of creditors' assignee. Certificate of appointment. Evidence of appointment. Removal of creditors' assignee. Electing new creditors' assignee. Appointment of official assignee as creditors' assignee. Valuations. Duties of creditors' assignee. Creditors' assignee's accounts. Personal estate and real estate to vest in assignee. Registration. Tenant's crops. Discharge from rents and covenants in conveyances, leases, &c.; proviso that creditors' assignee may elect to take for limited period. Vendor of estate in lands may compel creditors' assignee to elect. Creditors' assignee may execute powers. Bankrupt to join in conveyances. Conditional estates. Assignee may appoint bankrupt to superintend management of the estate. Bankruptcy of a member of a firm. Assignees may bring or defend actions or suits, &c. Mortgagee may bid at sale. Suits not to abate by death or removal of assignee; other provisions as to suit. Property may be mortgaged if more beneficial. Pay, half-pay, and pensions of bankrupt to be applicable for creditors. Sequestration of profits of business may be obtained. Court may determine on all differences between assignees, creditors, or parties claiming under trust deeds. Sale of book debts, &c. Remaining books and papers to be disposed of or kept as the court directs. Assignees to be subject to orders of the court.

301 to 329.—Proof of Debts.

301. Every creditor of the bankrupt may, after adjudication, prove his debt, by delivering or sending through the general post, before the appointment of the creditors' assignee, to the official assignee, and after such appointment, to the creditors' assignee, a statement of such debt, and of the account, if any, between the creditor and the bankrupt, together with a declaration, signed by the creditor, appended thereto, that such statement is a full, true, and complete statement of account between the creditor and the bankrupt, and that the debt thereby appearing to be due from the estate of the bankrupt to the creditor is justly due; and all bodies politic and public companies incorporated, or authorised to sue or bring actions, may prove by an agent, provided such agent shall in his declaration declare that he is such agent, and that he is authorised to make such proof; and such declaration, signed by such creditor and agent respectively as aforesaid, shall be in such form as General Orders shall direct.

302. False declaration a misdemeanour.

303. Every creditor of the bankrupt may also after adjudication prove his debt, by deposition in court or in chambers, or before a registrar at any meeting of creditors elsewhere than in court, or by affidavit, upon his own oath, or upon that of any clerk or other person in his employment; provided that where such deposition or affidavit shall be made by any other person than the creditor, the deponent shall, in his deposition or affidavit, set forth that he is duly authorised by his principal to make the deposition or affidavit, and that it is within his own certain knowledge that the debt was incurred, and for the consideration stated, and that to the best of his knowledge and belief the debt still remains unpaid and unsatisfied.

304 to 329. Statements to be examined by assignees. Examination of alleged creditors. Who may prove generally. Payment of assessed taxes. Proof for costs, &c. enforceable by process of contempt. Apportionment of rent. Distress not available for more than six months' rent. Articled clerks and apprentices. Officers of friendly societies and savings banks. Clerks' wages. Court may order wages not exceeding 40s. to labourer or workman. Set-off of mutual debts and credits. Proof for debts not payable at the time. Proof by sureties and persons liable for the debts of a bankrupt. Proof by obligees in bottomry or respondentia bonds. Persons effecting insurance admitted to prove loss. Proof by annuity creditor. Proof by sureties for payment of annuities granted by bankrupt. Proof in respect of debt contingent at the time of the bankruptcy. Proof for instalments. Proof in respect of liability contingent at the bankruptcy. Proof by principal against estate of bankrupt agent. Interest. Costs. Proving debt to be an election not to proceed against the bankrupt by action. Creditors having security not to receive more than other creditors. How proof may be expunged or reduced.

330 to 349. Classification of certificates abolished. Order of discharge shall be suspended, when. Discretion of the court. When order to take effect. Effect of discharge. Release of bankrupt when arrested after discharge. As to partners. Contract after filing of petition not binding on bankrupt. Discharge from contempt. Discharge not to extend to Crown debts, &c. without consent of Treasury, nor to damages for libel, &c. Consideration given to induce creditor to forbear opposition. Obtaining money, goods, &c. as an inducement to forbear opposition, or to consent to allowance of discharge. Rehearing. If suspended on rehearing, subsequent creditors to prove first against subsequent property. Order, when to be drawn up. Appeal.

Audit and Dividend.

350. No public sitting for audit.

351. Immediately on the expiration of four months from the date of the adjudication of bankruptcy, or as much earlier as, upon the representation of the assignees, the court shall appoint, the creditors' assignee shall submit to a meeting of creditors to be called for that purpose, and to be held before the registrar in chambers, of which meeting ten days' notice shall be given in the London Gazette and in two local newspapers, a statement of the whole estate of the bankrupt as then ascertained, of the property recovered, and of the property outstanding, specifying the cause of its being so outstanding, and of all the receipts, and of all payments thereout made or to be made; and the official assignee shall, and any creditor who has proved may, attend and examine such statement, and compare the receipts with the payments; and upon ascertaining what balance is then in the Bank of England to the credit of the estate, the meeting shall, by resolution, declare whether any, and what part, of the net produce of the estate, after making a reasonable deduction for future contingencies, shall be divided amongst the creditors.

352 to 358. Assignee not to keep money in his hands. Provision to be made for claims of creditors abroad, or not determined. One dividend meeting to be held for joint and separate estates. Dividend list to be prepared by assignee. Like proceedings at successive periods of four months. No action for dividends. Petitioning creditor compounding with debtor after bankruptcy.

Discharge of Creditors' Assignee.

359 to 369. Creditors to pass a resolution on the conduct of the creditors' assignee, after which he may apply to the court for a discharge. Effect of discharge. Unclaimed dividends, &c. to be paid into the Bank. Official assignee to act after discharge of creditors' assignee. If assignee indebted to bankrupt's estate become bankrupt, his discharge shall not discharge his future effects. Dividend warrants to be countersigned by registrar. Unpaid dividend warrants to be filed. Unclaimed dividends. Assignees under former flats retaining unclaimed dividends, &c. Official assignees not filing certificate of unclaimed dividends where to be paid.

Allowance to the Bankrupt.

370 to 377. For maintenance after discharge. One partner may receive allowance, although other partner not entitled. Payment of surplus to bankrupt. Excepted articles. Inventory and valuation of the remainder of the bankrupt's household furniture; temporary use of, by him. If entitled to any allowance, furniture, &c. to be taken in lieu.

378 to 380.—Estates Tail and Base Fees.

381. The court shall have power to dispose, for the benefit of the creditors, of any estate or interest, at law or in equity, which, at the time of adjudication or afterwards, before order of discharge, a bankrupt has in any copyhold or customary land, and to make an order vesting the land, or such estate or interest as the bankrupt has therein, in such person and in such manner as the court shall think fit.

382. Where the bankrupt's estate or interest is an estate or interest in equity only, the same shall vest by force of and according to the order, without other assurance.

383. Where the bankrupt's estate or interest is not an estate or interest in equity only, the order shall be entered on the court rolls of the manor of which the land is parcel, (which entry the lord, or his steward or steward's deputy, shall be bound to make), and shall be equivalent to a surrender of the same land, and, if made with the consent of the lord, shall be equivalent to both surrender and admittance.

384. Stamp duty on vesting order.

385 to 392.—As to Change from Bankruptcy to Arrangement.

385. At the meeting of creditors for the choice of an assignee, or at any meeting to be called for the purpose, and of which ten days' notice shall have been given in the London Gazette and in two local newspapers, a majority of three-fourths in number and value of the creditors present or represented at such meeting may resolve that the estate ought to be wound up under a deed of arrangement, and that an application shall be made to the court to stay proceedings in the bankruptcy for a period not exceeding two months, and on such resolution being passed, it shall not be necessary to elect an assignee. Resolution to be reported to the court.

387. If the proceedings in bankruptcy be stayed, as herein provided, the bankrupt, or any creditor nominated in that behalf by the meeting aforesaid, may, at any time within the period during which the proceedings are so stayed, produce to the court a deed of arrangement, signed by or on behalf of three-fourths in number and value of the creditors of the bankrupt; and the court may consider the same, and may examine on oath the bankrupt and any of the creditors who may desire to be heard in support of or in opposition to the deed, and may make such other inquiry as it may think necessary; and if the court shall be satisfied that the deed has been duly entered into and executed, and that its terms are reasonable, and calculated to benefit the general body of the creditors under the estate, it may, by order, make a declaration of the complete execution of the deed, and annul the bankruptcy; and such deed shall thereafter be as binding in all respects on any creditor who has not executed the deed as if he had executed it.

388. Either before or after such order the court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any application of the bankrupt, or of any party to the deed, or of any creditor or person claiming to be a creditor, respecting the disclosure, distribution, inspection, conduct, management, or winding up of the bankrupt's estate and affairs, or any act or thing relating thereto, or respecting the execution of any of the trusts or provisions of the deed, or the audit or examination of the accounts of a trustee or inspector, or the taxation or examination of the costs or charges of any attorney, solicitor, accountant, auctioneer, broker, or other person acting or employed under the deed, or generally for the decision of any dispute or question, and shall also have jurisdiction to entertain any application of any such person as aforesaid, respecting any matter for the submission whereof to the court provision is made by the deed, or any matter arising between any of the said persons, and any other person appearing and submitting to the jurisdiction of the court. Questions to be decided according to the law of bankruptcy. Power of the court to summon and examine. Where bankruptcy to be continued, or to be resumed.

393 to 400.—Trust Deeds for Benefit of Creditors, &c.

393. Every deed or instrument made or entered into between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, management, and winding-up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall be as valid and effectual and binding on all the creditors of such debtor as if they were parties to and had duly executed the same, provided the following conditions be observed; that is to say—

- (1). Three-fourths in number and value of the creditors of such debtor, whose debts shall respectively amount to 10*l.* and upwards, shall in writing assent to or approve of such deed or instrument within seven days from and after the execution thereof by such debtor:
- (2). If a trustee or trustees be appointed by such deed or instrument, such trustee or trustees shall execute the same within seven days after the day of the debtor's execution thereof:
- (3). The execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor and every trustee shall be attested by an attorney or solicitor:
- (4). Within fourteen days from the day of the execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor, the same shall be produced and left (having been first duly stamped) at the office of the chief registrar, for the purpose of being registered:
- (5). An affidavit by the debtor that three-fourths in number and value of the creditors of the debtor, whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, did in writing assent to or approve of such deed or instrument within seven days from and after the execution thereof by such debtor, and that such assent was fairly given or obtained, and without collusion or fraudulent concert with any creditor, shall, at the same time that such deed or instrument is produced and left for registration, be delivered to the registrar, who shall duly file the same.

394. No deed, instrument, or agreement, by which a debtor conveys, or covenants or agrees to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, for the benefit of the creditors, or makes any arrangement or agreement with his creditors, or any person on their behalf, touching the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, or winding-up of his affairs or estate, and the release or discharge of such debtor from debts or liabilities, shall be valid, or good in law, unless the same shall, within fourteen days from and after the execution thereof by such debtor, be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy in manner herein directed. Particulars of deed to be entered by the chief registrar, and published in the Gazette.

396. No deed or instrument required to be registered as aforesaid shall be registered unless a stamp duty shall have been first duly impressed or affixed thereon, computed according to the following rule; that is to say, if the estate and effects to be collected, administered, or distributed under such deed shall be sworn not to exceed the sum of 1000*l.*, a duty of 5*l.*; if such estate and effects shall be sworn not to exceed the sum of 3000*l.*, a duty of 10*l.*; if such estate and effects shall be certified to be above the value of 3000*l.*, or if no statement shall be made touching the value thereof, then the duty shall be 15*l.*

397. Memorandum of registration to be indorsed. Sects. 393 to 397 not to apply to deeds executed under sects. 385, 386, and 387.

398. From and after the registration of every such deed or instrument in manner aforesaid, the debtor and creditors, and trustees, parties to such deed, or who have assented thereto or are bound thereby, shall in all matters relating to the estate and effects of such debtor be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall respectively have the benefit of and be liable to all the provisions of this act, in the same or like manner as if the debtor had been adjudged a bankrupt, and the creditors had proved, and the trustees had been appointed creditors' assignees under such bankruptcy; and the existing or future trustees of any such deed or instrument, and the creditors under the same, shall, as between themselves respectively, and as between themselves and the debtor, and against third persons, have the same powers, rights, and remedies, with respect to the debtor and his estate and effects, and the collection and recovery of the same, as are possessed or may be used or exercised by assignees or creditors with respect to the bankrupt, or his acts, estate, and effects in bankruptcy.

399. After notice of the filing and registration of such deed has been given as aforesaid, no execution, sequestration, or other process against the debtor's property in respect of any debt, and no process against his person in respect of any debt, other than such process by writ or warrant as may be had against a debtor about to depart out of England, shall be available to any creditor or claimant, without leave of the court; and a certificate of the filing and registration of such deed, under the hand of the chief registrar and the seal of the court, shall be available to the debtor for all purposes as a protection in bankruptcy.

400. Stay of proceedings in bankruptcy pending the seven days. (See sect. 393).

401. If a debtor cannot obtain the assent of three-fourths in value of his creditors, by reason of his being unable to ascertain by whom bills of exchange accepted by him are holden, or by reason of the absence of creditors in a foreign country, or other similar circumstances, it shall be sufficient if he obtain the consent of three-fourths of all his other creditors to such deed or instrument as aforesaid; provided that in such case the deed or instrument be in such form as is expressed in Schedule (H.) to this act annexed, which shall vest all the estate and effects of the debtor in the trustees of such deed, and provided that all such other conditions as are hereinbefore required be duly complied with.

402 to 441.—Petitions for Arrangement between Debtors and their Creditors under the Control and Superintendence of the Court.

If proceedings in bankruptcy instituted, court to deal with the two proceedings. First meeting of creditors. Schedule of debts. Amendment of schedule. Notice to creditors by official assignee. Meeting of creditors. Debts may be proved at meetings. If three-fourths assent, second meeting to be appointed. Second meeting. Arranging debtor to attend official assignee. Joint creditors. Fraudulent concert void. Affidavit by petitioner. Resolution may provide for management of the estate. Assignees to be subject to the court as in bankruptcy. Court to have jurisdiction as in bankruptcy. Proceedings to be similar to those in bankruptcy. Protection to petitioner. Notice. Majority of creditors to act for creditors. Trustee to be appointed. Court may reject him. Remuneration of trustees. Official assignee may be trustee. Property to vest if so provided. New trustee. Reference of questions to the court. Concurrence of creditors. Court may examine on oath. Power to seize property, &c. Arrangement may be altered. Death of arranging debtor.

442 to 450. Discharge of arranging creditor. Discharge of trustee. Petition not to be withdrawn, but may be dismissed. On dismissal, order as to vesting &c. may be made. If petition dismissed, filing of it an act of bankruptcy. Validity of proceedings where petition dismissed. When petition converted into bankruptcy.

451 to 474.—Distribution of the Estates of deceased Debtors in certain Cases.

Creditors of deceased debtor, who has committed an act of bankruptcy within three months before his decease, may petition the Court of Bankruptcy for distribution of the estate of the deceased. Proof on which order for distribution is to be made. Order to issue if probable solvency is not established. Court may summon witnesses. Executor or administrator of deceased debtor may petition for order for distribution. Reservation of jurisdiction of Court of Chancery. Court may issue warrant to secure the property of the deceased in certain cases. Notices. Court need not appoint official assignee in certain cases. Priority of funeral and testamentary expenses preserved. Saving of certain rights of executor. In case deceased debtor had committed an act of bankruptcy within three months, creditors to have the same rights as regards goods in debtor's reputed ownership, estates tail, base fees, powers, and giving up leaseholds, &c., as in bankruptcy. Saving of acts done bona fide, in due course of administration, before petition. Creditors paid in full before filing of petition to refund rateably in case of deficiency of assets. 478. Advertisements.

479 to 485.—Meetings.

Creditors' assignee or inspector may call meeting of creditors. Notices. Questions to be decided by majority. Proxies. Creditors to vote according to balances due to them. Creditors under 10*l.* to be reckoned in value, not in number. Court may make declaration of such majority having acted.

486 to 507.—Evidence.

Inspection and copies of proceedings. Gazette to be evidence of bankruptcy. No proof of petitioning creditor's debt, &c., in certain actions and suits, &c., unless notice be given that those matters are to be disputed. Judicial notice to be taken of signature of judge or registrar and of the seal of the court. Forging signature or seal. Advertisements, when evidence. Inserting advertisements without authority. Adjudication, appointment of assignees, &c., conclusive. Certificates of trustees, &c. under arrangement to be conclusive. Provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, to be applicable to any matter in prosecution under this act. Evidence of declaration of insolvency. Evidence as to insolvency abroad. Death of witness. Notice of acts of bankruptcy to agents of corporate bodies. Affidavits. The courts in England to be auxiliary for the purpose of taking affidavits. Fees. Affidavit of prisoner. Bankrupt and bankrupt's wife to be examined upon declaration and oath.

508. Solicitors.

509. Misconduct.

510, 511. Costs. Witnesses and persons known or suspected to have bankrupt's property, &c., entitled to costs, &c. 512. Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, to be applicable.

513 to 519.—Powers of the Court in aid of the Court of Chancery.

Commissioners, &c. to be officers of the Court of Chancery. Lord Chancellor, &c. to make General Rules for certain purposes, viz. for enabling the Court of Chancery to send accounts and inquiries to commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy; for taking down evidence, &c.; for authorising commissioners and registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy to administer oaths and take pleas, answers, &c.; for enabling the said commissioners to examine witnesses; for providing for the authentication and transmission of pleas, examinations, &c. Under orders of reference, commissioners to have same powers, &c. as Masters in Chancery.

520 to 525. Courts in Scotland and Ireland to be auxiliary. Courts to be auxiliary to courts in Scotland and elsewhere. Transfer of English cases from Scotland.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 7, 1860.

IN a country like Great Britain, with dominions and colonies in every quarter of the globe, having continual intercourse, political and commercial, with all nations upon the earth, one would have imagined that few subjects would have been more interesting than international law, whether arising from those principles of justice which all civilised nations, as a species of common law, have in process of time admitted to be binding upon them, or from compacts or conventions in which such principles have been either expressly incorporated, partially modified, or entirely abrogated, in order to meet with the varying circumstances of time, place, or policy.

Contrary to what our expectations would be, the knowledge of international law is in this country confined to a few; nor is it possessed in an adequate degree even by those who, from their position, take a considerable share in our legislation, and in regulating our relations with other countries. There seems, indeed, to be rather more than a tendency, on the part of our leading statesmen, as far as possible to manage all questions affecting our relations with other countries, in their own small coteries, insinuating, if not asserting, that they cannot be properly conducted if ventilated among the profane vulgar, who, by its prying curiosity and annoying interpellations, would destroy that mysterious secrecy which they would lead us to believe is essential to diplomatic success.

A knowledge, however, of international law is, in our opinion, a necessary element, not only in the education of what we term civilians and of diplomatists, but of every member of the Bar who aspires to reach its highest ranks, and of every Englishman who would wish either to take any part in governing the country, or to influence those who do.

Formerly international law was supposed to be, and perhaps was, studied exclusively at Doctors' Commons; but whatever light the learned civilians may have had upon the subject they seem carefully to have kept under their own bushel, and to have confined its rays within the narrow precincts of the close college at the foot of St. Paul's.

When any difficult point of international law arose, the solution of which involved, perhaps, the issues of peace and war, an oracle was sought from Doctors' Commons. It is true, the law officers of the Crown were not disregarded; their opinions were received for as much as they were worth—perhaps for more. What, however, could in general either of such officers do—mere practitioners in courts of law or equity, who, perhaps, before accepting office, never in their lives read a line in any work upon international law—ignorant, perhaps, even of its very nomenclature? What would their opinion be worth? It would in all probability be a mere servile imitation of a document from Doctors' Commons, or be founded upon a hasty consideration of authorities seen for the first time, and upon principles purely imaginary, inviting the ready criticism of European and Transatlantic publicists.

Take, again, our diplomatists; would they less ably represent our country were they more deeply versed in the principles and history of international law? Should not an accurate knowledge of both be insisted upon as essential in those who represent us abroad? Should not an ambassador be considered as a person delegated to a foreign land to maintain the rights and real interests of his country, and not merely for the purpose of repairing his own broken fortune, or dispensing elegant hospitalities to the habitués of his own and each foreign court?

Look, again, at the debates in Parliament. Too often—say, and in the case of men of considerable mark—it is easily seen that the study of international law has formed no part of their education, and that they feel perfectly satisfied if, when the occasion arises, they are able to hit upon some passage of Grotius, Vattel, or Wheaton in support of the particular views they may happen to advocate.

But Doctors' Commons was the stronghold of the learning of international law. How, then, will the knowledge of it now be kept up? How and where will it be studied, when the College of Advocates has, in effect, been dissolved, and its members are merged in the Bar of England? We think that the Inns of Court would do well if they instituted another readership, the duty of the holder of which would be to deliver Lectures on the Principles and History of International Law. We would particularly call this subject to the attention of the Attorney-General, and those of the Benchers who, notwithstanding the opposition of their less enlightened colleagues, have, by their unceasing efforts for many years, done so much to promote the study of the law, and who have already raised the Inns of Court from the position of mere eating-houses or clubs (not bad ones, by the bye, so far as Benchers are concerned) to somewhat of the dignity of a Legal University.

Much, however, remains to be done. The Inns of Court, even in their present semi-reformed state, are far from holding the position which they ought to do; nor can Lord Coke's description of them in former days be truly applied to them now, that "all together they make the most famous University for profession of the law only, or of any one human science that is in the world, and advanceth itself above all others, quantum inter viburna cupressus."

A great step would, we think, be gained by those who wish to raise the Inns of Court to the dignity of the Legal University described by Lord Coke, if there was added to the domain of its studies such an important subject as international law. The Inns of Court might then be resorted to by men wishing to qualify themselves for the position of diplomatists or statesmen; and the wider range of knowledge which members of the Bar, intending to addict themselves to particular branches of the law, might acquire, would not render them less fit for the specialties of their Profession, whether as equity draftsmen, pleaders, or conveyancers; while it would, at the same time, be of most essential use to those of them who in after times might attain to the highest ranks, and become the advisers of the Crown or the administrators of justice.

THE question, whether confessions made to Roman Catholic priests are privileged from disclosure in a court of justice, has been again mooted. On this occasion the priest was committed to prison by Mr. Justice Hill for refusing to state from whom he had received certain stolen property, which he had delivered up to a policeman the day after the robbery. The ground of his refusal was, that the property had come into his possession in the course of the exercise of his duties in the confessional. The matter has been brought before Parliament, and will probably be discussed there in all its bearings. In the meantime our readers may be willing to read what has been written upon the subject by Mr. Best in his Principles of the Law of Evidence. The following extract is from p. 690 of the second edition of his valuable book:—

"Whether communications made to clergymen by persons applying for spiritual advice are or should be protected from disclosure in courts of justice presents a question of some difficulty. It is commonly thought that the decisions of the judges in the cases of Res v. Gilham (1 Moo. C. C. 186) and Res v. Wild (Id. 452), added to some others that will be cited presently, have determined it in the negative, and the practice is in accordance with that notion. But the former of these cases only shews that a confession of guilt made by a prisoner to the world or a magistrate, in consequence of the spiritual exhortations of a clergyman that it will be for his soul's health to do so, is receivable in evidence against him—a decision perfectly well founded, because such exhortations cannot possibly be considered illegal 'inducements to confess.' By this expression, as shewn in a former chapter, the law means language calculated to convey to the mind of a person suspected of an offence, that by confessing he will better his position with reference to the temporal consequences of that offence. And the ground on which a confession made after such an inducement to confess is rejected is the reasonable apprehension that in consequence of it the party may have made a false acknowledgment of guilt—an argument wholly inapplicable where he is only told that a spiritual benefit is to be derived from telling the truth. The case of Res v. Wild is even less to the purpose, as the party who used the exhortation there neither was, nor professed to be, a clergyman, and, wholly unsolicited, thrust it on the prisoner. The other cases to which allusion has been made are, an anonymous one in Skinner, 404; Res v. Sparkes, cited in Du Barré v. Livette, (1 Peake, 77); Buller v. Moore, (M'Nally's Ev. 253); and Wilson v. Rastall, (4 T. R. 753). In the first the question was respecting a confidential communication to a man of law, which Lord Chief Justice Holt, as might have been expected, held privileged from disclosure, adding, obiter, that 'it was otherwise in the case of a gentleman, parson, &c. The second and third are decisions, one by Buller, J., on circuit, and the other by the Irish Master of the Rolls in 1802, that confessions to a Protestant and Roman Catholic clergyman respectively are not privileged; and in the fourth, the judges in banc say, obiter, that the privilege is confined to the cases of counsel, solicitor, and attorney. How far a particular form of religious belief being disfavoured by law at the period affected the latter of those decisions is not easy to say, but both of them leave the general question untouched; and on Res v. Sparkes being cited to Lord Kenyon in Du Barré v. Livette, (1 Peake, 77), he said, 'I should have paused before I admitted the evidence there admitted.' He, however, decided that case on the ground that confidential communications to a legal adviser were distinguishable from others. It is also to be observed that the subject coming incidentally before Best, C. J., in Broad v. Pitt, (3 Car. & P. 519), very shortly after Res v. Gilham, he referred to that case as deciding that the privilege in question did not apply to a clergyman, but added, 'I for one will never compel a clergyman to disclose communications made to him by a prisoner; but if he chooses to disclose them, I shall receive them in evidence.'

"There cannot, we apprehend, be much doubt, that previous to the Reformation statements made to a priest under the seal of confession were privileged from disclosure, except, perhaps, when the matter thus communicated amounted to high treason. In the old laws of Henry I (Leges, Hen. 1, c. 5, s. 17) is this passage:—“Caveat sacerdos ne de hiis qui ei confitentur peccata sua alicui recitet quod ei confessus est, non propinquis nec extraneis; quod si fecerit, deponatur, et omnibus diebus vite sue ignominiosus peregrinando peniteat.” The laws of Henry I are of course not binding per se, and are only valuable as guides to the common law; but it is otherwise with the statute Articuli Cleri, (9 Edw. 2, c. 10), which is as follows*:—“Quandoque aliqui confugientes ad ecclesiam . . . dum sunt in ecclesia custodiuntur per armatos infra cimiterium, et quandoque infra ecclesiam, ita arte quod non possunt exire locum sacrum causâ superflui ponderis deponendi, nec permittitur eis necessaria victui ministrari. Responsio: . . . dum sunt in ecclesia, custodes eorum non debent morari infra cimiterium, nisi necessitas vel evasionis periculum hoc requirat. Nec arcetur confugi dum sunt in ecclesia, quin possint habere vite necessaria, et exire libere pro obsceno pondere deponendo. Placet etiam Domino Regi ut latrones appellatores, quandocumque voluerint, possint sacerdotibus sua facinora confiteri; set caveant confessores ne erronee hujusmodi appellatores informant.” In commenting on this statute, Sir Edward Coke, writing, he it remembered, after the Reformation, expresses himself as follows, (2 Inst. 629):—“Latrones vel appellatores. This branch extendeth only to thieves and approvers indicted of felony, but extendeth not to high treasons: for if high treason be discovered to the confessor, he ought to discover it, for the danger that thereupon dependeth to the king and the whole realm; therefore this branch declareth the common law, that the privilege of confession extendeth only to felonies. And albeit, if a man indicted of felony becometh an approver, he is sworn to discover all felonies and treasons, yet is he not in degree of an approver in law, but only of the offence whereof he is indicted; and for the rest, it is for the benefit of the king, to move him to mercy; so as this branch beginneth with thieves, extendeth only to approvers of thievery or felony, and not to appeals of treason; for by the common law a man indicted of high treason could not have the benefit of clergy, (as it was holden in the king's time, when this act was made), nor any clergyman privilege of confession to conceal high treason; and so it was resolved in 7 Hen. 5, (Rot. Parl. anno 7 Hen. 5, nu. 13); whereupon friar John Randolph, the Queen Dowager's confessor, accused her of treason for compassing of the death of the king. And so was it resolved in the case of Henry Garnet, (Hil. T., 3 Jac.), superior of the Jesuits in England, who would have shadowed his treason under the privilege of confession, &c.; and albeit this act extendeth to felonies only, as hath been said, yet the caveat given to the confessors is observable ne erronee informant.” This passage has been cited to prove the common law on this subject; but we much doubt whether the caveat at the end of the above enactment was inserted to warn the confessor against disclosing the secrets of the penitent to others. The grammatical construction and context seem to shew that it was to prevent his abusing his privilege of access to the criminal by conveying information to him from without, and the clause is translated accordingly in the best editions of the statutes.

“If the refusing to hold spiritual communications sacred is an error, an opposite and greater one is the attempt to confine the privilege to the clergy of some particular creed. Courts of municipal law are not called on to determine the truth or merits of the religious persuasion to which a party belongs, or to inquire whether it exacts auricular confession, advises, encourages, or permits it—the sole question for them ought to be, whether the party who bona fide seeks for spiritual advice should be allowed it freely. By a statute of New York, (1 Greenl. Ev., s. 247, note), ‘No minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination whatsoever, shall be allowed to disclose any confessions made to him in his professional character in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of such denomination.’ A similar statute exists in Missouri, and the like principle is recognised in France.”

The repugnance of clergymen to disclose that which has been confided to them by the penitent can be well understood, and is entitled to sincere respect, and, regarding the question as one of principle, we think that they ought not to be compelled to make such disclosure, unless it can be shewn that disadvantage will accrue in the administration of justice, outweighing the advantages of holding the communication to be privileged. Perhaps, in this view, it may be worthy of consideration how far the granting of absolution, upon confession, repentance, and the making of such restitution as is in the power of the offender, tends to impede the detection of crime, by quieting his conscience, and allaying his fears of spiritual consequences. Is he as subject to remorse as the unabsolved? Is it as probable that he will, under the pangs of self-accusation and the sense of sin, be led to do or say that which may lead to the detection of himself and his co-offenders, as if he had never had the balm of absolution poured upon his wounds?

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—In the late case of Underhill v. Longridge, in the Queen's Bench, (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 221), it appeared as if some words were accidentally omitted from the 9th section of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108, and the Chief Justice adjourned the case in order that the Parliament roll might be examined.

It is to be inferred from this that the Court and counsel were not aware that since 1849 the original acts have all been printed, and the copies sold by the Queen's printers are struck off from the very same types, so that there is no longer any possibility of a discrepancy between the Parliament roll and the copies supplied to the public. M. I. B.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—In the case of Dunncliffe and Another v. Mallet (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 252; 29 L. J., C. P., 70) the Court of Common Pleas decided, that where a patent had been taken out for an invention of “improvements in lace and other weavings,” and the patent, so far as it related to one of such improvements, had been assigned, the assignee could sue in his own name for an infringement of the part of the patent assigned to him.

The proposition appears a startling one. Surely the monopoly granted to the patentee is one entire thing. Even though the patent includes several inventions, it does not create several monopolies*.

* The above version of the statute is taken from the valuable work intitled ‘Statutes of the Realm, printed by command of his Majesty King George III, in pursuance of an address of the House of Commons, from original Records and authentic Manuscripts,’ and differs in several respects from that given by Sir E. Coke in his 2nd Institute.”

* Compare Branton v. Hawkes, (4 B. & Al. 543); HMU v. Thompson, (8 Taunt. 375); and Morgan v. Seaward, (2 M. & W. 544).

Independently of the letters-patent, an inventor has no sole property in his invention. He may exercise it freely, and keep it to himself if he can, but he has no natural right to appropriate any part of the field of invention to himself, so as to impede the free exercise of the ingenuity and labour of any one else who may afterwards discover the same art which he himself has invented. The interest which the patent gives him is not, strictly speaking, a property in anything, but rather a power or contingent right of action, which is made assignable by the grant. Its nature was well explained in an article in 7 Jur., part 1, p. 252, though it is not necessary to follow the author to the conclusion he seeks to draw. He says, letters-patent "do not purport to vest in the patentee any estate or property either in the invention or in the letters-patent, except in so far as they may vest in him the property of the parchment and seal as a chattel; but they purport merely to grant him a power. The words of the grant are, 'our especial license, full power, sole privilege, and authority, that he, the grantee, his heirs and assigns, and no others, shall make, use, exercise, and vend his invention.' The granting part really grants nothing that the grantee would not have without the grant. The grant to him is of the privilege of making and using his own invention—a privilege which he clearly has at common law, without any grant from the Crown. The really operative words which give the only valuable right or an exclusive privilege are the words 'and no others.' In fact, the letters-patent operate, in reality, not by way of grant to the patentee to do anything which he might not do before, but by way of restriction on the rest of the Queen's subjects, restricting them from doing what without the letters-patent they might lawfully do as well as the patentee. At most, letters-patent confer a power, and not any legal estate, strictly speaking, in anything except in the parchment of the letters-patent. This view is, indeed, supported by the practice of conveyancers in assignments of letters-patent, the form of which differs materially from that of an assignment of any personal property in which there is distinctly and strictly an estate—as, for instance, leasehold premises. In assigning leasehold premises, the land, or house, or other premises constituting the subject-matter of the estate for years, are assigned, and the estate of the assignor is assigned; and it is this assignment which passes the interest. The indenture of lease is, it is true, assigned also; not, however, for the purpose of passing any estate, but merely as a muniment or evidence of title. But in an assignment of a patent it is otherwise. There the operative words of the assignment never purport to pass any estate in anything. They are so framed as to pass the letters-patent—that is, the instrument of grant, and the property therein, and the license, powers, and privileges thereby granted; which shews, that though the assignment of patents is of every day's practice, no idea has been entertained that any estate, except the chattel interest in the parchment, passes by such assignment. If this be so, then an assignment of such letters-patent is really nothing but an assignment of a power."

The right, whatever it may be, is granted to the patentee, to hold to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns. The word "assigns" has a well-known legal meaning, and, looking at the language of letters-patent, it seems clear, that while they empower the patentee to license others, whom he may "agree with," to use the invention, the powers are only to be held to him and his assigns. As the right under the letters-patent is a chose in action not assignable at common law, no one can take a legal interest in the letters-patent except in strict pursuance of the terms of the grant by the Crown.

No person can become legally interested in the letters-patent unless the powers become vested in him by assignment, or as executor or administrator of the patentee, however large his beneficial interest may be in the inventions which are the subject of the patent. In Protheroe v. May (5 M. & W. 675) it was held that a license is no part of the patent, and that there is no distinction between an exclusive license to exercise the invention throughout the whole district covered by the patent, during the whole duration of the patent, and an ordinary license; and therefore that an assignment of such a license to more than twelve persons would not invalidate the patent under the condition which was formerly inserted in letters-patent.

A beneficial interest in one of the inventions, in respect of which the letters-patent are granted, is therefore clearly not enough to entitle the party so interested to sue an infringer in respect of damage to such interest.

The power or right of action created by letters-patent is not divisible by the act of the patentee. It falls directly within the rule to be deduced from the several instances referred to in Co. Litt. 164. b.; Hawkins v. Cardee, (1 Salk. 85); Vin. Ab., "Apportionment," A.; and Brooks v. Byam, (2 Story's Rep. 525); namely, that choses in action and incorporeal rights are not divisible where the charge or liability of the party burdened would be increased by the division.

If the principal case is rightly decided, a weaver who put in practice the "improvements in lace and other weavings" would be subjected to several actions by the assignees of the several parts of the patent—an amount of vexation which neither the Legislature in passing the statute, nor the Crown by the language of the letters-patent, would appear to have contemplated; while it is difficult to see how he could enforce the correlative remedy, by scire facias to repeal the patent, against the assignees of the part of the patent, referring to one only of several inventions specified.

Upon principle, therefore, it would seem that a person who has a grant from the patentee of the sole right to exercise one of several inventions, in respect of which letters-patent are granted, has no such interest as to enable him to maintain a separate action in his own name.

There are no reported cases on the question of the rights of assignees of partial interests in letters-patent to maintain actions in our courts. Questions of this nature have, however, frequently arisen in the courts of the United States; and as these decisions were not brought before the Court of Common Pleas in the principal case, I venture to call attention to a few of them. In Whittemore v. Cutter (1 Gallison, 329) it was held, that an assignee of an undivided moiety of a patent right may join with the patentee in an action for infringements. In Tyler v. Tuel, (6 Cranch, 324), decided in 1810, one Benjamin Tyler had assigned to the plaintiffs the full and exclusive right of making, using, and vending an improvement in grist mills, called the wryfly, except in certain counties of the State of Vermont. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs were not legal assignees, capable of maintaining an action for an infringement.

By the act of Congress of the 4th July, 1836, c. 357, s. 11, "every patent shall be assignable in law, either as to the whole interest, or any undivided part thereof, by any instrument in writing; which assignment, and also every grant and conveyance of the exclusive right, under any patent, to make and use, and to grant to others to make and use, the thing patented within and throughout any specified part or portion of the United States, shall be recorded" &c. The act thus carefully distinguishes between an assignment and the grant of an exclusive right within a certain district. The 14th section of the same act of Congress provides, that the action shall be brought in the name of the person or persons interested, whether as patentee, assignees, or as grantees of the exclusive right within and throughout a specified part of the United States.

In the case of Blanchard v. Eldridge, (1 Wallace, jun. 337; S. C., 2 Robb's Pat. Cas. 737), Blanchard brought a suit in his own name for an infringement of a patent for turning irregular forms, and recovered damages. He had assigned to one Carter the full and exclusive license, right, and permission to have, hold, use, and exercise Blanchard's patent for turning irregular forms, &c., so far as the said improvement is or may be used for turning shoe lasts, boot and shoe trees, and hat blocks, and also for turning spokes for wheels of all kinds of carriages, wheels, and all other articles that form any part in the construction of carriages; to have and to hold the said right and license exclusive of all others, except such as had received grants of licenses before the date of the assignment. The infringement proved was making shoe lasts, i. e. an infringement of one of the rights granted to Carter. The defendant's counsel moved for a new trial, on the ground that Carter was the proper person to have sued. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Grier, J., said, "The point is not without difficulty, and the force of the argument for the defendant cannot be evaded, if the assumption be true that the deed transfers the legal title to Carter of that portion of the patent which it purports to vest in him. But if it does not so operate, it cannot be noticed in a court of law, and cannot affect the case. As these grants of the Crown were at common law construed with the greatest strictness, the privileges granted by a patent for a monopoly would probably not have been treated as capable of assignment unless made so by the letter of the grant. Since the stat. 21 Jac. 1, patents for useful inventions (notwithstanding the statute itself mentions the inventor only) have always granted the privilege and monopoly to the inventor, his executors, administrators, and assigns. These monopolies, are, therefore, assignable as other personal chattels, by force of the grant which creates them. As a chattel, also, it might be held by two or more joint owners; hence any undivided portion or interest in the whole, as a unity, might be assigned, and the assignees might join in an action for infringement of their rights;" (citing Boulton v. Bull, 2 H. Bl. 463). "But the patent right itself was unsusceptible of local subdivision. As a privilege or monopoly, it was an entire thing, indivisible, and incapable of apportionment;" (citing Brooks v. Byam, 2 Story's Rep. 525). "But the act of Congress of 1836 has regulated the assignment of patents. The 11th section provides that a patent shall be assignable—first, as to the whole interest; secondly, as to any undivided part thereof; and, thirdly, an exclusive right may be granted throughout any specified part or portion of the United States. The 14th section requires the action for an infringement of a patent to be brought 'in the name or names of the person or persons interested, whether as patentee, assignees, or as grantees of the exclusive right within and throughout a specified part of the United States.' The word 'assignees,' in this section, must be construed by reference to the 11th section, already referred to, which defines in what way a patent may be assigned—either the whole, or any undivided portion of the whole. This statute also renders the monopoly capable of subdivision in the category of its locality, but in no other way. The patentee is not allowed to carve out his monopoly, which is a unity, into a hundred or more, all acting in the same place, and liable to come into conflict. The grant to Carter by the deed under consideration is not of the whole monopoly, nor of any undivided portion of the whole; and though for an exclusive right, it is not exclusive of all others within a certain district or specified part of the United States; on the contrary, it is an exclusive right to use the machine for a specific purpose. A machine for turning irregular figures may be used for numberless purposes. If the patentee, or his assignees, can assign to A. an exclusive right to use the machine for making shoe lasts, to B. for turning spokes, to C. for axe handles, and so on to the end of the alphabet, then may he, out of his monopoly, carve a thousand others, each subdivision like a polypus, being itself a several monopoly, and having a separate existence in the same place. What endless perplexity and confusion must necessarily arise from the establishment of such a doctrine. It is sufficient for the purpose of the present inquiry that the act of Congress does not give a legal sanction to such transfers or assignments, nor has it subjected even a pirate of the machine to fifty different suits by fifty several assignees, whose several interests might be affected if a patent could be thus split into numerous exclusive rights or sub-monopolies. Whether this deed confers on Carter and his assigns more than a special license it is not necessary to inquire; as it does not confer a legal title to the whole or an undivided portion of the patent, or grant an exclusive right within a specified part of the United States, it cannot be received to affect this case. It was wholly irrelevant, and ought not to have been received in evidence." He referred also to a case where the same point had been decided by Judge Nelson on the New York Circuit.

Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in Gayler v. Wilder, (10 Howard, 477, 494), said—"The monopoly granted to the patentee is one entire thing. By the 11th section of the act of 1836 the patentee may assign his whole interest, or an undivided part of it. But if he assigns a part, under this section, it must be an undivided portion of his entire interest under the patent, placing the assignee upon an equal footing with himself for the part assigned. Upon such an assignment the patentee and his assignees become joint owners of the whole interest secured by the patent, according to the respective proportions which the assignment creates. By the 14th section the patentee may assign his exclusive right within and throughout a specified part of the United States; and upon such an assignment the assignee may sue in his own name for an infringement of his rights. But in order to enable him to sue, the assignment must undoubtedly convey to him the entire and unqualified monopoly which the patentee held in the territories specified, excluding the patentee himself as well as others; and any assignment short of this is a mere license; for it was obviously not the intention of the Legislature to permit several monopolies to be made out of one, and divided among different persons within the same limits. Such a division would subject a party who made a mistake as to his rights, or used the invention without authority, to be harassed by a multiplicity of suits instead of one, and to successive recoveries of damages by different persons holding different portions of the patent right in the same place. Unquestionably a contract for the purchase of any portion of the patent right may be good, as between the parties, as a license, and enforced as such in the courts of justice; but the legal right in the monopoly remains in the patentee, and he alone can maintain an action against a third party who commits an infringement upon it."

Yours faithfully,

Temple, March 28, 1860.

LAW OF PROPERTY AMENDMENT BILL.—In the number of THE JURIST of the 11th February, the Law of Property Amendment Bill is stated to be the Lord Chancellor's, and his name is on the back of the bill, but this arose simply from Lord St. Leonards having asked him during his absence to read the bill for him a first time, which in the Lords is of course. The bill is Lord St. Leonards', and is a supplement to his bill of last session.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Trinity Educational Term by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will pursue the History of our Constitution and Jurisprudence during the Reigns of the Tudors and the Stuarts. He will trace the progress and varieties of judicial opinion, illustrated by references to modern decisions, as bearing on the Law of Real Property, the Law of Evidence, the Law of Contracts, the Law of Libel, the Criminal Law, what is called the Common Law, and the Doctrines of Equity.

The books to which he will chiefly refer are—Lord Bacon's Legal Tracts—Plowden's Reports—Cases of William and Berkeley, and of Richard v. Saunders and Archer—Case of The Camoys Peerage, (6 Cl. & Fin.)—The Sussex Peerage case, (11 Cl. & Fin.)—Coke's Institutes—Blackstone's Commentaries, (Kerr's edition)—Butler and Hargrave's Notes to Coke upon Littleton—State Trials—Statutes of the Period—Rapin's History of England—Hallam's Constitutional History—Reeves' History of the English Law, vol. 5, (temp. Elizabeth)—Clarendon's Works—May's History—Millar's History of the Constitution—Burnet's History—Ralph's History—Foxe's Life of James II.—Reports: The Countess of Rutland's case, vol. 3; Lord Abergavenny's case, vol. 6; Chudleigh's case, vol. 1, (Fraser's edition)—Preface to Gilbert on Uses, by Lord St. Leonards—Emlyn's Preface to Second Edition of State Trials.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Ten Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. On the Origin of the Jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Chancery over the Administration of Personal Assets.
2. On Suits for the Administration of Assets, both Real and Personal.
3. On Equitable Assets.
4. On marshalling Assets.
5. On Contracts of Suretyship, and the Equitable Rights to which they give rise.
6. On Suits to enforce the Performance of Agreements.—Limits of this Jurisdiction.—The Statute of Frauds.—Doctrine of Part Performance.

The Reader will continue with his Senior and Junior Classes the general courses of Equity already commenced. He will also continue in both Classes to explain the leading rules of Pleading in Equity, from the work of Lord Redesdale.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, Ten Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Doctrine of Notice, as between Vendor and Purchaser.
2. The Law of Domicil, as it affects Property.
3. The Law of Fire Insurance.

In his Private Lectures the Reader will refer more particularly to the cases cited in the Public Lectures, and continue his course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a text-book.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes to deliver Ten Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Theories of Grotius, and the Assumptions which form the Basis of International Law.
2. The Modern History of certain Doctrines of the Roman Jurisconsults.

3. International Law, so far as it is directly derived from Roman Law.

4. The Roman and Feudal Conceptions of Property, with the consequences to which they respectively tend.

5. The Roman Law of Crimes.

6. Domicil.

With his Private Class the Reader will read the Roman Law of Persons, taking as his principal text-book the Commentaries of Gaius, and at the same time making use of the work of Warnkönig, Institutiones Juris Romani Privati. He will also read certain specified titles of the Digest.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Ten Public Lectures, as under—

Prior to the Recess the Reader will lecture on the Law of Torts, inquiring as to—

1. The Ingredients in a Right of Action ex Delicto.
2. The Ordinary Forms of Actions ex Delicto.
3. The Pleadings in such Actions.

After the Recess the Reader will lecture on Criminal Law, more particularly on—

1. The Elementary Principles of our Criminal Law.
2. Criminal Procedure, including that before Justices of the Peace.
3. Offences of Ordinary Occurrence, whether triable at the Assizes or at Sessions; first, against the Person and Reputation; secondly, against Property.

With his Private Class the Reader will, so far as time may allow, pursue in detail the course of instruction above generally indicated, especially directing attention to the most recent Reported Cases having reference to the subjects specified. The Reader will use as Text-books Smith's Leading Cases, (4th edition); Broom's Legal Maxims (3rd edition) and Commentaries on the Common Law; and Blackstone's or Stephens' Commentaries on the Laws of England.

By order of the Council,

(Signed) RICHARD BETHELL, Chairman.

Council Chamber, Lincoln's-inn,

37. Commencement of act.

38. Short title of act.

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon Edward Shepherd Creasy, Esq., Chief Justice of Ceylon.

A singular suit has just been decided in the Champaign (Ohio) Court of Common Pleas. The action was brought under the "Act to provide against the Evils from the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors," passed the 1st May, 1854, the 7th section of which gives to a wife, child, parent, guardian, employer, or other person who shall be injured, in person, property, or means of support, by an intoxicated person, a right of action against the person who sold the liquor to the intoxicated person. The plaintiff in the case was Jane Brush, and the defendant Peter Lawson. Damages were laid at 20,000 dollars. The plaintiff set forth in her petition that she was, on the 29th April last, and now is, the wife of one Reed Brush; that the said Reed Brush was, and for a long time had hitherto been, in the habit of getting intoxicated and drunk, which was well known to the defendant; that the said defendant, well knowing the premises, did, on the 29th April, 1859, in violation of the law, sell and deliver to the said Brush one pint of whisky, which the said Brush then and there drank, and with which the said Reed Brush was intoxicated and frenzied; that in consequence of the said sale, and by means of the said drunkenness, and while in the said state of intoxication, the said Brush did furiously seize an axe, and without provocation upon the part of the plaintiff, with force and violence cut off her left foot, whereby the plaintiff is now crippled. The defendant alleged that the maiming, &c. of the plaintiff was the result of a domestic quarrel, brought about by her unchaste conduct, &c. The Court ruled that the immoral character of any one could not reduce the rights guaranteed by law to him; that Reed Brush was the instrument of Peter Lawson, and the defendant could not claim anything more in this case than if he had in propria persona thrown the axe. The jury, after a consultation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing her damages at 5000 dollars.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 14, 1880.

THE old doctrine, that a corporation aggregate has no soul, and therefore is incapable of a malicious intention, has been described by Erle, C. J., as being rather quaint than substantial; and accordingly, in these days, when substance is preferred to form, and utility to quaintness, it has been held that corporations, especially those of a trading character, have souls, and may therefore be guilty of malice. The number and importance of corporate bodies established for the purposes of trade in modern times, and transacting their business through the agency of servants, have rendered it necessary to relax the old rules existing upon the subject, and to extend to them the maxim "respondeat superior," as if they were private individuals, the only special limitation ingrafted upon their liability being, that the act complained of should be within the scope and purpose of the incorporation. Thus, after being held liable to an action for a false return to a mandamus, (Yarborough v. The Bank of England, 16 East, 6); for the negligence of their servants, (Scott v. The Mayor, &c. of Manchester, 2 H. & Norm. 204; 3 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 590); for an assault, (The Eastern Counties Railway Company v. Broom, 6 Exch. 314; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 297); for false imprisonment, (Chillon v. The London and Croydon Railway Company, 16 M. & W. 212); to an indictment for non-feasance, (Reg. v. The Birmingham and Gloucestershire Railway Company, 3

Q. B. 223); and for misfeasance, (Reg. v. The Great North of England Railway Company, 9 Q. B. 315; 10 Jur., part 1, p. 755), it was decided, that an incorporated company might be sued for a libel contained in a message transmitted by their telegraph, the company being incorporated for the purpose (inter alia) of transmitting messages, (Whitfield v. The South-eastern Railway Company, 4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 688), and that they might also be guilty of acts maliciously committed with a view to injure individuals or rival companies. (Green v. The London General Omnibus Company, 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 228). In this last-cited case the declaration in substance alleged that the defendants maliciously placed their omnibuses just before and just behind the omnibuses of the plaintiff, (he being a carrier of passengers for hire, &c.), so as to prevent persons from entering the plaintiff's omnibuses. Upon demurrer, on the ground that a corporation aggregate could not be guilty of a malicious intention, the declaration was supported; and in delivering the judgment of the Court, Erle, C. J., said—"The whole of the acts that are charged against the defendants are acts connected with the driving of their vehicles; and this is a company incorporated for the purpose of driving omnibuses, and therefore the actual things done by the defendants are acts within the purpose of their incorporation. Unless they had been wrongfully done, of course there could be no ground of complaint; but being wrongfully done, we think clearly the action lies. . . . An action for a wrong lies against a corporation where the thing done is within the purpose of the incorporation, and it has been done in such a manner as to constitute what would be an actionable wrong if done by a private individual. . . . There are numerous authorities in support of the principle on which we rely; and I may add, as an additional reason for our decision, the inconvenience to the public that would arise if we were to hold that these companies, incorporated for the purposes of trade, had a restricted limitation put upon their liability by reason of such incorporation, and were exempt from responsibility because they intentionally wronged the public. We think it extremely important, where such companies admit that they have in fact intentionally committed a wrong, that the public should have a remedy against them, and not be driven to an action against their servants and others whom they have employed, and who may be entirely incapable of giving the recompense which the law may award."

OBSERVATIONS ON THE LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

THE following observations on the Law and Equity Bill have been laid before the House of Lords:—

"The intention of the framers of this bill would appear to have been the prevention of delay and expense, by rendering the court in which litigation of any kind may be commenced competent to the determination of all questions whose solution is necessary in order that complete justice may be done between the litigants.

"So far as this can be 'satisfactorily' done, to use the language of the preamble, no one would question the expediency of legislation; but it appears to us that the principle upon which it is attempted in the bill is essentially erroneous.

"The bill may be divided into two principal heads.

"It commences by conferring on persons apprehensive of an injury, which would be the subject of redress in a court of law, the power of originating proceedings in a court of law to prevent the injury. It subsequently enables a plaintiff, who insists on a legal title, to compel his adversary to submit his defence, which may be merely equitable, to the decision of a Court of law, and deprives the defendant of all power of having recourse to a Court of equity.

"The result is this:—A plaintiff is to be allowed, in each class of cases, to have the choice of his court; and any one having a legal title to property, but subject to equitable claims, may, by taking the initiative as plaintiff in a court of law, withdraw the equitable claims, the only real question probably in dispute, from the consideration of the Courts which have hitherto been accustomed to take cognisance of them.

"No solid reason can be given for either course of action. As long as the distinction exists between legal and equitable interests, so long will two different courses of procedure be required, whether such procedure be exercised by one Court (as formerly on the two sides of the Court of Exchequer) or by separate Courts, as in the courts of common law and the courts of equity; and the only 'satisfactory' mode of doing complete justice will be by employing the apt procedure in each case, according to the nature of the rights in question between the parties. The bill leaves it to the choice of the plaintiff to determine whether his antagonist shall have this advantage or not.

"The 12th clause of the bill recognises the probable existence, indeed, of cases in which a Court of common law cannot do justice; but the 30th clause renders it impossible for the defendant to seek aid elsewhere unless the Court of common law shall have become convinced of such its incapacity.

"The true principle, as it appears to us, on which a bill for enabling a Court of common law to do complete justice between the litigants, without regard to the distinction between legal and equitable rights, should proceed, would be this—remodel the court of law; give it all the officers proper to the adjustment of equitable questions; reconstruct its procedure where equitable rights may intervene; or, in other words, reconstitute such a court as the equity side of the Court of Exchequer, which was recently abolished, with the general approbation of the Profession. But to enact that a Court of common law, either with its existing incomplete machinery, or with some imperfect additions to its powers, falling far short of those vested in Courts of equity, shall either on the one hand abandon the case, owing to its incompetency, after great expense and delay on the part of all concerned, or shall proceed and compel the defendant to submit himself to the procedure of the imperfectly constituted court, seems to us calculated to create confusion, from the probably conflicting decisions of Courts of law and equity on the same class of questions; injustice to the defendant, whose rights are subjected, without his consent, to the operation of an imperfectly constituted tribunal; and, in the greater number of cases, to double vexation, after much useless delay and expense.

"The mode of appeal provided by the bill is a further instance of the mischief that may arise to suitors. The appeal is to be to a Court of error—a very competent tribunal for determining the points of law which remain when a jury has solved the questions of fact, but rigid in the extreme in its rules of procedure, and utterly incompetent to dispose of the mixed questions of fact and law that continually arise on appeals from Courts of equity.

"We would beg to suggest a few instances only in which the bill may work great injustice. A vendor has let a purchaser into possession on a parol agreement. The purchaser may have effected extensive improvements. The vendor, apprehensive of a bill for specific performance, brings ejectment, with no object but that of bringing the defendant before a Court of law instead of a Court of equity. A fraudulent trustee brings ejectment against his cestui que trust. An equitable mortgage has been created by deposit of deeds; the mortgagor brings detinue for the deeds. In all these cases, we ask, why is the plaintiff to be at liberty to change the jurisdictions? There is really no question of law between him and the defendant; the whole dispute is on the equitable right.

"Courts of equity determine the rights of every person interested in the question raised once for all, but for this purpose necessarily convene all persons interested. Questions as to parties are often questions of considerable nicety. The Court of law cannot, under this bill, summon any parties other than the litigants in the action. It may, however, determine that no other party is necessary, and the defendant will have to submit to that conclusion; but on a bill filed by any of the absent parties, a Court of equity may come to a contrary conclusion, and the defendant may have to abide a decision the reverse of that which he had to submit to at law.

"We see no adequate provision for the protection of infants, whose trustees may have subjected themselves to the operation of the 30th clause, and be thus precluded from asserting the rights of the infant in equity.

"It is reasonable that, where both parties consent, any matters, either legal or equitable, should be determined by one Court. It is quite reasonable, also, that no slight incidental equities on collateral points should impede the decision of the Court of law; but, in practice, we conceive the constitution of the courts of law, and their ordinary course of procedure, point with sufficient clearness to the extent of jurisdiction which can be conveniently conferred on them for this purpose. Whenever a case can be brought to a single issue of law or fact between the parties, whether the issue depend on legal or equitable title, the Court of law can satisfactorily determine it. The existing statutes have, as it seems to us, provided an adequate remedy by allowing equitable pleas; and where such pleas have failed, the reason of such failure has been the want of adequate machinery to work out the determination of the right. The 10th clause attempts to extend the jurisdiction, and some attempt is made to extend the machinery; but nothing short of a complete conversion of the court into a court of equity can secure the result aimed at, viz. satisfactory decision; and the 12th clause will be found ultimately to render the bill a dead letter.

"We do not wish to be understood as recommending a reconstruction of the courts of law on the model of the old Court of Exchequer. We think no attempt should be made to alter our tribunals until a careful revision has been made of our whole law.

THE PLEA OF "NOT GUILTY."

(From The Friend of the People).

At the present time, while a bill is before Parliament for the purpose of doing away with the plea of "not guilty," it will interest our readers if we lay before them some extracts from a letter written by the Rev. W. C. Osborn, who was for many years chaplain to the gaol at Bath. Nothing can be more conclusive in favour of an alteration in the law than his observations, and no one has had greater experience in the evils arising from the present system. Indeed, when the very trivial objections against any alteration in the law are considered, the only wonder is, that a remedy so simple and so efficient as that of at once doing away with the plea of "not guilty" has not long ago been adopted.

The Rev. Mr. Osborn notices the various meanings given to this plea by learned writers on the subject. It is generally explained as being a mere matter of form. Some persons have held that the words, "Are you guilty or not guilty?" are not to be understood according to the usual meaning of language, but that the question is tantamount to "Do you wish to be tried?" In other quarters this question has received another solution, and has been paraphrased thus—"Are you guilty or not guilty, according to the laws of the land, which demand certain particulars to constitute the offence, and evidence to prove them?" The difficulty seems to be to make clear to the prisoner's mind that there can be a distinction between the forensic meaning of the words and their acceptance in ordinary language. Having thus noticed the different meanings given to this plea, the reverend gentleman alludes more particularly to the evils arising to the prisoners from this mode of arraignment. He continues:—

"In the first place, I will suppose the prisoner guilty of the charge made in the indictment. The plea must be 'guilty' or 'not guilty.' Take the former. His plea may be made from various motives: it may arise from an honest conviction of having committed the offence laid to his charge. But here there is the greatest danger to the just administration of the law. The prisoner may misunderstand the indictment. Indeed, so nice are the distinctions between offences tried in criminal courts, that the best lawyers often differ in their opinions. The judges, who always incline to the side of mercy, feel that it is dangerous to receive, without the greatest care, even the prisoner's confession of guilt, and therefore so frequently give them an opportunity to reconsider their plea of guilty, and sometimes advise them to retract it, and plead not guilty. Should this permission or advice avail to the retracting of the plea of guilt, it can hardly be expected that the jury should immediately forget, and be so regardless of, the prisoner's confession as to be able to give an unbiassed verdict on the evidence.

"Should the plea of guilty be persisted in, then the prisoner is convicted on his own testimony, without oath or other evidence; and thus, it may be, he places in jeopardy, without sufficient grounds, his character, his freedom, or his life, through a conscientious scruple or a misconception of the crime laid to his charge; whereas, if the plea of guilty be retracted under this strong inducement at such a time, and the prisoner be acquitted, he will probably become emboldened in crime, and it may be expected that he will again become the inmate of a gaol.

"Other evils may arise to those who plead guilty, from the circumstance that some prisoners have been known to plead thus to prevent a full exposure of their crimes, and so obtain a lighter punishment. But, in consequence of these motives being known to actuate some criminals, few, if any, when they plead guilty from the purest motives, have the credit of doing so. But the guilty prisoner, who can boldly say, 'not guilty,' and confront his prosecutor and the witnesses, enjoys every privilege which the law gives: he is able to take advantage of any error in the indictment; he may be able to give an impression of his innocence by his demeanour. If convicted, he has all the benefit that falsehood and apparent innocence can obtain; but if acquitted, he approves of his own conduct, and is liable to fall into crime again.

"Now, let me suppose the prisoner guilty, and to plead not guilty. Here also evils arise. It frequently happens that as soon as a prisoner is apprehended, and charged with an offence, an attorney is engaged to prepare a brief for counsel; but should the prisoner, during the interval between his commitment and trial, have his mind at all exercised on the subject of truth, he is led to resist all convictions, and to put off all thoughts of religion, because he cannot receive the benefit of counsel unless he pleads not guilty, which may be to his conscience an untruth.

"The following cases, which came under my own observation, will shew how this question operates on the consciences of prisoners, and what injuries they receive from being obliged to plead guilty or not guilty. Two lads were committed to take their trial for felony. As the separate system was pursued in the prison in which they were confined, they were unable to communicate with each other while awaiting their trial. One of these lads became very seriously impressed, and deeply concerned about his eternal interests. Frequently, during the night, he was known to pray most fervently, when he was heard to confess his crime: to pray for his accomplice and all the prisoners: to implore blessings on the officers, the governor, and chaplain. No one could doubt his sincerity. A short time before his trial the chaplain told him that he should admit those prisoners to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper that appeared in a proper state of mind. As he manifested a desire to partake of this ordinance, the chaplain proceeded to ask him some plain questions, such as, 'Do you heartily repent you of your sins past?' 'Do you steadfastly purpose to lead a new life?' The prisoner, on being asked these questions, in a pensive mood walked about his cell, looking on the floor; and, in great excitement, exclaimed,

'I must plead not guilty.' The chaplain then remarked that he never wished to enter into conversation with prisoners before trial on the subject of their pleading. On another occasion he exclaimed, 'What must I do? If I plead guilty, I certainly shall be transported.' This conflict in the prisoner's mind was extremely painful for the chaplain to witness, and the state of the law placed the latter in a very trying position. An attempt was then made to calm the prisoner's mind; and, after some conversation, he said, 'If I am to do that which is right in the sight of God, I must and will, whatever is the consequence, plead guilty.' On the day of his trial he found an opportunity of conversing with his accomplice, and the following plan was agreed upon. He knew that if he pleaded guilty, or was found guilty by the jury, a former conviction for felony would be proved against him, and would place him in the greatest danger of being transported; but against his accomplice there was no former conviction; and, therefore, if he should plead guilty, a short imprisonment would probably be the punishment inflicted upon him. Knowing this, they determined that the one who was in danger of transportation should plead not guilty, and the other guilty. When the chaplain, who happened to be in the court at the time, heard this, he was not less grieved than surprised at the way in which these prisoners pleaded. During the trial, the one again and again asserted his innocence in support of his plea; and the other wished to take all the blame on himself, and to be considered the only guilty party. This led the judge and jury to take a favourable view of the former case, and a verdict of not guilty was given, on which the prisoner was discharged. The other, who pleaded guilty, was sentenced to one month's imprisonment, with hard labour. Thus a guilty prisoner was acquitted, and incalculable mischief was done to the soul of a young man whose conduct had been such as to raise the hope of his thorough reformation. The lad who was acquitted was not long afterwards again committed to take his trial on another charge of felony. Thus the reformation of the prisoner was hindered; and to his disregard of truth, while his conscience was awakened, I feel that I am quite justified in attributing his subsequent miseries.

"Another instance of this kind that came under my observation was as follows:—A prisoner, previous to trial, again and again alluded to her being guilty of the offence laid to her charge. At her trial she pleaded not guilty, and protested her innocence. The jury found her guilty, and the recorder sentenced her to some months' imprisonment. From this time she declared she was innocent of the crime of which she had been convicted, although previously she had made no secret of her guilt. After her trial she was altered in other respects, and shewed that her conscience was troubled."

COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.
(LORD CHANCELLOR).

Bill to amend the Procedure and Powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

Be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for the Judge Ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes alone to hear and determine all matters arising in the said court, and to exercise all powers and authority whatever which may now be heard and determined and exercised respectively by the full court, or by three or more judges of the said court, the Judge Ordinary being one; or where the Judge Ordinary shall deem it expedient, in relation to any matter which he might hear and determine alone by virtue of this act, to have the assistance of one other judge of the said court, it shall be lawful for the Judge Ordinary to sit and act with such one other judge accordingly, and, in conjunction with such other judge, to exercise all the jurisdiction, powers, and authority of the said court.

2. Provided always, that the Judge Ordinary may, where he shall deem it expedient, direct that any such matter as aforesaid shall be heard and determined by the full court; and in addition to the cases in which an appeal to the full court now lies from the decision of the Judge Ordinary, either party dissatisfied with the decision of such judge sitting alone in granting or refusing any application for a new trial, which by virtue of this act he is empowered to hear and determine, may, within — after the pronouncing thereof, appeal to the full court, whose decision shall be final.

3. Where there is a right of appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the full court there shall be the like right of appeal to the said House from the decision of the Judge Ordinary alone, or with any other judge, under this act.

4. The sittings of the full court shall be holden during the first six days of sitting in each term, and the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer shall, by a rota or otherwise, as they deem most convenient, make provision for the attendance of the requisite number of such judges to make, with the Judge Ordinary, a full court during such six days in each term; and sect. 2 of the act of the last session of Parliament, cap. 61, shall be repealed.

5. Where only one of the parties to any matter before the court shall appear, it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall see fit, to order her Majesty's proctor to instruct counsel to argue before the court any question in relation to such matter, and which the court may deem it necessary or expedient to have fully argued.

6. And whereas, by sect. 45 of the act of the session holden in the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 85, it was enacted, that "in any case in which the court should pronounce a sentence of divorce or judicial separation for adultery of the wife, if it should be made to appear to the court that the wife was entitled to any property, either in possession or reversion, it should be lawful for the court, if it should think proper, to order such settlement as it should think reasonable to be made of such property, or any part thereof, for the benefit of the innocent party, and of the children of the marriage, or either of them:" the said enactment shall extend, and be deemed to have extended, to authorise the court to order the settlement, for the purposes therein mentioned, of any estate, right, or interest whatsoever of the wife in any property settled, or agreed to be settled, by any person whomsoever, and to authorise the court to order, for the purposes aforesaid, the exercise, release, or extinction of any powers whatsoever which might have been exercised by or for the benefit of the wife over or in respect of such property; and after the pronouncing of a final decree of divorce or judicial separation, any instrument executed pursuant to any order of the court made under the said enactment before the passing of this act, or under such enactment as amended by this act, shall be deemed valid and effectual in the law, notwithstanding the existence of the disability of coverture at time of the execution thereof.

The question has been raised as to the liability of volunteers in uniform to pay tolls on the metropolitan bridges. Toll was lately demanded of some of the Inns-of-Court Volunteers, both at Waterloo and Vauxhall Bridges, which led in one or two instances to considerable discussion, and very nearly to a breach of the peace. It will, therefore, be useful to call attention to the Vauxhall Bridge Act, 49 Geo. 3, (local), c. cxlii, s. 97, which is as follows:—"Provided always, and be it enacted and declared, that no toll whatsoever shall be demanded or taken for any horse, beast, cattle, or carriage, of whatever description, employed or to be employed" on public service as therein mentioned, "or for any volunteers upon their march, or upon duty, or in going to or returning from the place appointed for and on the days of exercise, or for any horse, mare, or gelding furnished by, or for, or belonging to any corps of yeomanry or volunteer cavalry, and rode by them in going to or returning from the place appointed for and on the days of exercise, provided that such persons be dressed in the uniform of their respective corps, and have their arms, furniture, and accoutrements, according to the regulations provided for such corps respectively, at the time of claiming such exemption as aforesaid; . . . and if any person shall claim and take the benefit of any of the exemptions by this act granted, from the whole or any part of the several tolls hereby authorised to be taken, not being entitled to the same, such person or persons, for every such offence, shall forfeit and pay any sum (not exceeding 5*l.*) to be recovered and applied as other penalties are by this act directed to be recovered and applied." This section is repeated almost verbatim in the Waterloo Bridge Act, 49 Geo. 3, (local), c. cxci, s. 108, and in the Chelsea Suspension Bridge Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 39, s. 74.—Solicitors' Journal.

A TREATISE ON the LAW of PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 21, 1860.

IN these days of general decorum and temperance it does not often happen that we have to record the fact of two of our Courts being in direct antagonism—the fact of one of the highest Courts of our realm being checkmated by the quiet but effectual defiance of a Court of inferior jurisdiction. Such an event has nevertheless lately occurred; and, as no great damage has been done, we hardly know whether we ought to be scandalised or amused when we find one of the disputants, and that disputant the discomfited one, to be no less a personage than the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

The circumstances are briefly these:—One Dyson, an insolvent debtor, having petitioned the Insolvent Court, a vesting order was made on the 1st December, 1849. By an indenture dated the 8th July, 1850, Dyson assigned to Robert Cook certain property, subject to the payment of his (Dyson's) debts, and in the year 1853 again became insolvent. On the 6th August, 1855, Mr. Commissioner Law made an order reciting that the fund in court under the first insolvency exceeded the amount required to pay all debts and costs, and that there were various claimants of the surplus, and directing those parties to attend and exhibit the grounds of their claims; and that Mr. Cook should exhibit the original instruments and accounts on which he relied, and produce a specific account, in debtor and creditor form, with the dates of all transactions between him and Dyson from the 14th March, 1850, to the 16th March, 1853, verified by affidavit. The before-mentioned indenture, and its execution, were proved in the Insolvent Court. By a subsequent order, dated the 12th July, 1856, reciting, that, after paying the debts under the first insolvency, a considerable sum remained in court, and that there were different claimants—first, Mr. Cook, who claimed the whole under the deed made to him; secondly, a similar claim by other persons; and, thirdly, a claim by the assignee for the creditors under the second insolvency in 1853—it was ordered that all parties interested should be at liberty to attend and deliver their claims. Mr. Cook accordingly attended, and, after shewing that the deed of assignment to him was long prior to the second insolvency, demanded a vesting order, and payment to him of the money in court; but the commissioner refused to do this, or act on the deed, and insisted upon inquiring into the validity of the deed, the consideration given for it, and the rights of other persons who made claims subsequent to it in point of date; against which course of proceeding Mr. Cook protested.

In furtherance of his protest Mr. Cook applied for and obtained from the Court of Chancery a writ of prohibition, prohibiting the Insolvent Court from adjudicating on, or dealing with, the surplus fund in court, except so far as was necessary in order to give effect to the before-mentioned deed of transfer to Mr. Cook. But the commissioner refused to make an order for vesting the surplus fund in Cook, or to make any order at all; at the same time saying that, but for the prohibition, he would have ordered the fund to be vested in the assignee under the second insolvency.

Mr. Cook thereupon applied to the Court of Queen's Bench, of which Lord Campbell was then Chief Justice, for a writ of mandamus, to be directed to William John Law, Esq., the chief commissioner of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, commanding him to make an order for the payment to Mr. Cook of the said sum of money in court. But the rule, having been granted in the first instance with reluctance, was on the 31st January, 1857, discharged, with costs, on the ground that the duty of the commissioner was judicial, and not merely ministerial.

Nothing daunted, Mr. Cook went back to the Court of Chancery, and on the 22nd May, 1857, filed a bill against the provisional assignee and the other claimants upon the surplus estate, praying that he might be declared entitled to the fund, and that the assignee might take proceedings for the purpose of transferring it to him. Sir J. Stuart, V. C., made an order declaring that the fund was well assigned, and Cook entitled to it; and on appeal this order was confirmed. A copy of the decree was given to the Insolvent Court, and an application made to it for an order vesting the fund in Cook. But the Court refused to make any order.

Again, in his trouble, Mr. Cook flew back to his friends in Chancery, and on the 19th July, 1859, presented a petition before Lord Chancellor Campbell and the Lords Justices, praying that the provisional assignee should be ordered to bring the fund into court. The assignee represented, that, the estate being under the control of the Insolvent Court, he could not do this without its order; and the petition was therefore dismissed, but without costs. The Lord Chancellor, however, said, that the title of Cook having been confirmed by the decree of the Court of Chancery, the duty of the commissioner had become ministerial, and that, under the altered circumstances, an application should be made to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus.

"Now," thought Mr. Cook, "armed as I am with the authority of the learned judge who presided over the Court of Queen's Bench when it formerly refused my application, I am at last secure;" and on the 30th January in this year, with the confidence of a man supported by authority, and with the eagerness of hope deferred, he renewed his application to the Queen's Bench. But, alas! so impressed were the learned judges of that Court with the soundness of the previous decision, and with the unaltered position of matters, that, with the greatest respect for the Lord Chancellor's opinion, and a polite doubt as to the sound discretion of the learned commissioner, they would not even grant a rule to shew cause. And thus, at a most vexatious expense of time, temper, and money, has Mr. Cook been taught the lesson, that not all the law in the world, nor the highest legal opinion in the realm, can prevail against a petty Court jealous of its jurisdiction, and standing up for its dignity.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters-patent to be passed under the Great Seal, giving and granting the office of one of the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer to James Plaisted Wilde, Serjeant-at-Law.

Correspondence.

ASSIGNMENT OF PERSONALTY UNDER LORD ST. LEONARDS' ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I have just prepared a draft transfer of a mortgage in fee from two surviving trustees to them and a new trustee. In this I have conveyed the mortgaged property, habendum to the new trustee, to the use of the old and new trustees; and, under the impression that Lord St. Leonards' Act of last session authorised me, I assigned the mortgage debt from the two old trustees to the three old and new habendum et recep-tum accordingly.

Before giving out the draft for ingrossment, I turn once more to the act, and find that the "assignment to self and others," sec. placitum, comprises only "personal property now by law assignable;" and as it occurred to me that a mortgage debt was not by law assignable, I suppose I must call in the intervention of the provisional trustee, who I thought had sought, in another sphere, the congenial society of Richard Roe and other mighty shades.

Before finally abandoning the perusal of the act, I turned to the end, and then to the beginning of it, to see if there were any interpretation clause, which, by declaring that the negative should, where necessary, be taken as the affirmative &c., might assist me a little; but all was barren.

I do not know whether this point has been noticed by your readers, and that I have only found a mare's nest; if so, consign this communication to the Balaam box. If you think it is new, it will no doubt be judicious to lay it before them, either in this or some other form. Yours obediently, F.

Manchester, April 12, 1860.

[The circuity of assigning to a third person, in order that he might re-assign to the first assignee jointly with others, was never necessary in dealing with equitable interests, because any declaration of intention is, in equity, equivalent to the most formal assignment. If, therefore, the mortgage debt is only assignable in equity, an assignment to the assignor and others will operate, independently of the act, as far as it is possible to deal with the debt.—ED.]

JURIES.

In a recent article upon the Common-law Commissioners' Third Report we noticed that they again invite attention to the propriety of securing the attendance on common juries of the class of persons who now serve exclusively on special juries; and we also remarked that we had been unable to discover in Lord Campbell's bill any clause grounded on this part of the report. The omission may, perhaps, be accounted for without assuming any difference of opinion to exist between the framers of the bill and the commissioners. They do not suggest that any amendment of the law is necessary on this point, but only that the existing law should be enforced in practice. The subject is of great importance to the community; and all that is required to effect a valuable reform here lies within the power of attorneys. Will they now avail themselves of the opportunity which yet remains of obtaining credit for working out what is required of themselves? A few words will make our meaning clear. By the act of 6 Geo. 4 c. 50, s. 1, it is provided—"That every man, (except as thereafter excepted), between the ages of twenty-one years and sixty years, residing in any county in England, who shall have in his own name, or in trust for him, within the same county, 10*l*. by the year above reprises, in lands or tenements, whether of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, . . . or who shall have within the same county 20*l*. by the year above reprises, in lands or tenements, held by lease or leases for the absolute term of twenty-one years, or some longer term, . . . or who, being a householder, shall be rated or assessed to the poor rate, or to the inhabited house duty, in the county of Middlesex, on a value of not less than 30*l*., or in any other county on a value of not less than 20*l*., or who shall occupy a house containing not less than fifteen windows, shall be qualified, and shall be liable, to serve on juries for the trial of all issues joined in any of the king's courts of record at Westminster, . . . and in all courts of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, . . . and shall also be qualified and liable to serve on grand juries in courts of sessions of the peace, and on petty juries, for the trial of all issues joined in such courts of sessions of the peace."

Sect. 30 of the same act provides that the Courts may order special juries. Sect. 31 provides that persons described in the jurors' book as esquires or persons of higher degree, or as bankers or merchants, shall be qualified and liable to serve on special juries; and sect. 35 gives an implied permission to persons serving upon special juries to take for such service such sum of money as the judge who tries the issue shall think just and reasonable, not exceeding 1*l*. 1*s*., except in cases wherein a view is directed.

No reasonable man can seriously doubt that the liability imposed by sect. 31 upon esquires, bankers, and merchants is to be understood cumulatively with reference to the liability imposed by sect. 1. The language of the latter section is sufficiently clear to establish this proposition; but the permission accorded by sect. 35, to persons serving on special juries alone, of receiving a reward for their service, is certainly more than sufficient to satisfy any lingering doubt upon the point. The reason why special jurors are paid, and common jurors are not paid, is so apparent, that, but for the misapprehension which the existing jury practice justifies in those who do not know the jury law, we should deem it quite unnecessary to explain, that, in the eye of the law, service on the common jury is a duty common to all, or nearly all, of her Majesty's subjects; while service on a special jury, in the eye of the law, is an additional duty imposed on a particular class of the community, over and above the duties common to all. As the jury law is now administered, the payment of the special juror justly presents itself to the common juror's mind as a glaring and unjust anomaly. How the present practice first arose it would be interesting to know, but it is impossible to justify it. It is well for those who have not learnt, from sad experience, that the common jury, as summoned under the existing practice of the undersheriffs, is pre-eminently a class jury, and not one containing an indiscriminate admixture of all classes, as contemplated by law. It is now the practice of the undersheriffs' offices to eliminate from the list from which the common jury is selected all persons described as esquires or persons of higher degree, or as bankers or merchants. The consequence is, that our common juries are composed exclusively of retail traders or small tenant farmers, according as they are drawn from urban or rural districts. We fancy that we can trace this practice to a state of mental confusion, owing its origin to the double meaning attached to the word "common." It seems as if some undersheriff in bygone days had understood the phrase "common jury" to mean, not a general or ordinary jury, but a jury of common fellows, and had sought to carry out this view in practice, by removing from the list all whose social position was on a par with, or higher than, his own. We say, it appears as if some undersheriff had thought and acted thus, because the undersheriffs exercise, or ought to exercise, absolute control over the summoning of juries, and it is from them that the public is entitled to demand the proper discharge of this important duty.

We commend the following passage from the Common-law Commissioners' Third Report to the careful consideration of attorneys, as well as of undersheriffs and their deputies. The commissioners say—"We think it right to avail ourselves of this opportunity to invite renewed attention to our former observations respecting the constitution of juries; more especially we would urge the consideration of that part of our recommendations which relates to securing the attendance on common juries of the class of persons who now serve exclusively on special juries, with a view to the improvement of the former, by the admixture of persons of higher education and intelligence. We are strongly persuaded that a very great improvement would, by this means, be effected in the constitution of juries; and as we do not propose to do away with the right of parties to resort to a special jury, or to deprive special jurors, when serving as such, of the additional remuneration which they are in the habit of receiving, we can see no ground why the liability of such persons to serve on common juries, which already exists in law, though it is not required in practice, should not be enforced."

We need hardly add, that we entirely agree with this recommendation of the commissioners. According to the opinion of these learned persons, the Legislature has done all that belongs to it to do towards effecting the desired object. It remains, therefore, for the judges to see that the law relating to this matter is carried out with honesty and intelligence; and here attorneys can give good aid, by calling the attention of the Bench, wherever suitable occasion offers, to the illegality and unfairness of the present system, as it affects those who are now placed on common juries, and the evils incident thereto, so far as it touches the interests of litigants.—Solicitors' Journal.

A TREATISE on the LAW of PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, APRIL 28, 1860.

THE original and sole foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to decree specific performance is simply this—that an award of damages at law will not give a party the compensation to which he is entitled—that is, will not put him in a situation as beneficial to him as if the agreement were specifically performed. (Harnett v. Yeilding, 2 Sch. & L. 553). It is upon this principle that contracts for the purchase of land will ordinarily, in the absence of some counter-vailing equity, be decreed to be specifically performed; for it is evident that damages may not compensate the purchaser for non-performance of the contract; whereas, by the decree, he gets the very thing he contracted for.

Moreover, in all cases where a Court of equity would decree specific performance in favour of a person who has contracted to purchase any estate or thing, it will entertain a suit for specific performance by the vendor, although all that he seeks is payment of the price for which he contracted.

This, however, depends upon the principle, that the remedies of both parties to a contract ought to be mutual; so that, although the vendor might obtain adequate damages upon an action at law, yet, inasmuch as the purchaser could not do so, and could therefore maintain a suit in equity, the vendor would be entitled to seek relief in the same court. Indeed, we believe it may be correctly laid down as a general proposition, that whenever one of the parties to a contract may file a bill in equity for specific performance, on the ground that damages at law would not afford him adequate compensation, the other party to the contract may resort to the same Court, although the same reason is not applicable, but simply on the ground of mutuality of remedy.

We make these preliminary remarks before noticing a case of some novelty, in which the principles of the law relating to specific performance were involved, but which were not, we think, whether the decision be right or wrong, sufficiently borne in mind or considered.

The case alluded to is that of Rogers v. Challis, (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 334), the facts of which are briefly as follows:—The defendant, through his agent, applied to the plaintiff for a loan of 1000*l.*, upon the terms of its being secured by a bill of sale of furniture, &c., and a mere deposit, or an assignment also, of a lease; the principal to be repaid by instalments, the first whereof was to be further secured by a bill of exchange, with the acceptance by an approved person or firm. There was, moreover, to be a sufficient and available guarantie against the removal of the goods comprised in the bill of sale. After some communications between the parties the guarantie was approved of. A further correspondence then took place between the defendant's agent and the plaintiff, the one complaining of the delay, and the other of the omission to send the proper papers to prepare the assignment. In the meantime, however, the defendant obtained the necessary loan from another person upon more favourable terms. On the 14th January, 1859, the plaintiff filed a bill, praying that the defendant might be compelled to borrow 1000*l.* of the plaintiff in pursuance of the agreement made between them, or otherwise that the plaintiff might be awarded compensation or damages for the default of the defendant. The Master of the Rolls dismissed the bill, with costs, being of opinion, in the first place, that the Court had no jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of a contract to borrow a sum of money; and, in the next place, that the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, did not give the Court of Chancery jurisdiction to assess damages in all cases where it might think it desirable so to do, but only in cases where the Court already has jurisdiction to grant specific performance.

With regard to the second point decided by the Master of the Rolls, we entirely concur; for there can be no doubt, upon reference to sect. 2 of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, that the power to award damages conferred thereby upon the Court of Chancery is expressly confined to cases in which the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction, or for specific performance; and in exercise of it the Court may award damages, "either in addition to or in substitution for such injunction or specific performance."

With regard to the first point, we certainly entertain considerable doubt whether his Honor arrived at a correct conclusion, or that the reasoning by which he arrived at it will bear the test of a close examination.

In giving judgment his Honor said, "This is not a contract to purchase an article; it is not a contract to purchase a debt upon certain terms, or a contract to purchase a quantity of goods on having payment made by instalments in a particular manner; for it has been held that there may be circumstances to give the Court jurisdiction in such a case; but an ordinary contract for the sale or purchase of goods is not the subject of specific performance. This is nothing more than a proposal of one to lend and another to borrow. It is a new proposition that the Court has jurisdiction where there is a mere personal obligation created by one person saying, 'If you will lend me a sum of money, I will repay it, and give you your security,' even though the terms are settled between them. In cases of specific performance, the principle on which the Court interferes is, that the remedy at law is inadequate or defective. But by what possibility can it be said that in this case the remedy is defective? It is a simple money demand. The plaintiff says, 'I have sustained a pecuniary loss by your allowing my money to lie idle—by my not getting such a good investment as I could otherwise have got.' . . . If a person agrees to buy a sum of stock at a particular price, or if he agrees to lend a sum of money at a particular rate, it is contrary to every principle which this Court has ever acted upon to say that it has jurisdiction to grant specific performance; always bearing in mind that the principle upon which this Court grants specific performance is, that the remedy at law is inadequate and defective; and also bearing in mind, as favourable to the plaintiff, the observation made by Lord Eldon, that the discretion of the Court is to be exercised according to fixed principles, and not arbitrarily."

In the first place, we can scarcely agree with the Master of the Rolls, that where a person contracts to borrow money from another, and to convey or assign to him certain estates or specific property, by way of security, there is a mere personal obligation created between them, nor why specific performance of the contract should not be decreed, just as well as in the case of a contract to purchase property. The situation of the mortgagee is analogous to that of the purchaser: he is, in effect, a purchaser pro tanto; his contract is not merely a personal one—it has reference to the property to be conveyed or assigned by way of security; nor does there appear any valid reason why, as in the case of a purchase, it should not be enforced in rem.

But then the Master of the Rolls assumes, that, in the case of a mortgage, the Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction, because it only exists where the remedy at law is inadequate or defective. But may there not be many cases, where there are contracts for the advance of money by way of mortgage of property, in which the remedy at law may be inadequate and defective? Suppose, for instance, a person contracted to lend money to another upon the security of land adjoining to his own, for a term of years—say for twenty years—at a fixed rate of interest; that the title of the land was approved of, but the borrower refused to complete the contract on his part; would damages at law give an adequate compensation to the intended mortgagee? How, in fact, would damages be assessed? Independently of the value which the intended mortgagee might attach to the particular estate offered by way of security, on account of proximity or peculiar value, (circumstances which ought to have some weight), how could the jury estimate the loss which the intended mortgagee might incur by not having a certain rate of interest for his money during the term of years agreed upon?

During that period the rate of interest might fluctuate greatly; and that being so, neither a jury nor the Court could properly—that is to say, accurately—assess the damages. It was upon this principle that, in Adderley v. Dixon, (1 Sim. & S. 607), the vendor of debts, which had been proved under a commission in bankruptcy, obtained a decree for specific performance of the contract, Sir J. Leach, V. C., observing, that "a Court of equity will decree specific performance, because damages at law cannot accurately represent the value of the future dividends; and to compel the purchaser to take such damages would be to compel him to sell those dividends at a conjectural price."

It is true, that the case before Sir J. Leach arose upon the contract of sale; and the point now under consideration arises upon a contract of mortgage; but there appears to be no valid reason why the same principle should not apply to both cases, nor why the intended mortgagee should be compelled to forego the security agreed upon, and a fixed rate of interest, for what, in effect, would be a purely conjectural price, viz. damages assessed by a jury.

If, in the case now under consideration, the intended mortgagee should be entitled to specific performance, on the grounds we have before stated, the intended mortgagor could also have obtained specific performance, if not upon similar grounds, nevertheless upon the grounds which we have before alluded to, that the remedies in equity between parties to a contract must be mutual.

We hope that this subject will obtain a more searching judicial consideration, and that if there appears to be no sufficient reason why the principles of the law of specific performance, long since acted upon in the case of contracts for sale, should not also be applicable to cases of contracts of mortgage, the Court of Chancery will not hesitate to include them within the limits of its jurisdiction.

In the case of Rogers v. Challis there may be other reasons why specific performance could not have been granted, such as the subsequent mortgage of the property to a person who may not have had notice of the original contract.

Our remarks are confined solely to the question, whether specific performance of a contract to mortgage an estate might not, at any rate in some instances, be enforced by a Court of equity, on the same principle upon which it enforces specific performance of a contract to purchase land.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY, April 24.

LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

The Lord Chancellor, in moving the second reading of this bill, said that we had arrived at a crisis in law reform, and the question now was, whether there should be a further fusion of law and equity. That subject had been commended to the careful attention of Parliament in the speech delivered from the Throne at the commencement of the session, with a view to enable the courts of common law finally to determine, in a satisfactory manner, any case which might be duly brought before them. There prevailed in this country what he believed was unknown in any other civilised State—a distinction between the law administered in one tribunal and the law administered in another. That had arisen from what he must call the narrow-minded and technical decisions of the common-law judges in former times. Justice having been denied to the subject in the courts of common law, it became necessary to apply to another tribunal. Another tribunal was constituted, from which the most important advantages were derived by the country—he meant the Court of Chancery. The great men who had presided in that court had constructed a most beautiful system of jurisprudence, the admiration of the whole world. For many generations a conflict went on between the courts on one side of Westminster Hall and the courts on the other, and Lord Mansfield made an attempt to bring about some reconciliation. But that jurist incurred great obloquy for his endeavours, because it had unhappily been the practice of the law courts for centuries before to regard their respective rules as absolute perfection. He remembered, indeed, that when he himself entered the Profession the equitable doctrines of Lord Mansfield were sneered at and contemned. Thus things continued, until fortunately a commission was appointed by her Majesty to consider what improvements could be made in the courts of equity. The commission consisted of eminent men—viz. Sir J. Romilly, Lord Justice Turner, Sir W. P. Wood, Mr. Justice Crompton, Sir R. Bethell, Sir J. Graham, Mr. Henley, Mr. J. Parker, and Mr. W. M. James. Their recommendations, as far as the courts of equity were concerned, had been almost entirely carried into effect; but he was sorry to say that in the common-law courts much yet remained to be done. The commission took the most enlightened view of the subject, and offered most valuable suggestions. In the report which they presented to her Majesty in 1852 they stated:—

“The mischiefs which arise from the system of several distinct courts proceeding on distinct, and in some cases antagonistic, principles, are extensive and deep-rooted. These mischiefs, we believe, have arisen in part from the different principles by which the different courts are governed, and the different systems of law from which those principles are derived, and in part from inherent defects in the powers of the several courts. . . . It happens that in many cases parties, in the course of the same litigation, are driven backwards and forwards from courts of law to courts of equity, and from courts of equity to courts of law. A defendant in an action at law, who has a just ground of defence, is often obliged to resort to equity to control the decision of a court of law, or to restrain the plaintiff at law from proceeding to obtain a judgment which cannot in equity be permitted to be available. . . . Again: courts of law have no powers for the preservation of property pending litigation. A court of equity has such powers; and parties suing in courts of law are thus frequently driven into equity for the preservation of the property pending the suit at law.”

The commissioners laid down principles which he wished to see adopted. They said—

“It is obviously most desirable, that in every case the court which has the cognisance of the matter in dispute should be able to give complete relief.”

Having, then, discussed the various remedies which had been suggested, they continued—

“We have arrived at the conclusion, that without abolishing the distinction between law and equity, or blending the courts into one court of universal jurisdiction, a practical and effectual remedy for many of the evils in question may be found in such a transfer or blending of jurisdiction, coupled with such other practical amendments, as will render each court competent to administer complete justice in the cases which fall under its cognisance. We think that the jurisdiction now exercised by the courts of equity may be conferred upon courts of law, and that the jurisdiction now exercised by courts of law may be conferred upon courts of equity, to such an extent as to render both courts competent to administer entire justice, without the parties in the one court being obliged to resort to the aid of the other.”

There the ground was laid down on which this bill was founded—one cause and one court. It was not proposed that a suit should be brought in the Court of Queen's Bench against a trustee for breach of trust, or that an action for assault and battery should be brought in the Court of Chancery; but that legal rights should be enforced in the courts of common law, and, if equitable questions arose incidentally, that those courts should have power to dispose of them without entailing on the parties the necessity of going to another tribunal, employing another set of counsel, and thus incurring infinite delay and expense. His hon. and learned friend Sir R. Bethell, who was not only a great advocate, but a profound jurist, in an address which he delivered at the inauguration of the Juridical Society in 1855, said—

“For above a century this country has exhibited the anomalous spectacle of distinct tribunals acting upon antagonistic principles, and dispensing different qualities of justice. It is the rule and duty of the one set of courts frequently to refuse to recognise the real right of ownership—to ignore defences and claims founded on the best established rules of justice; and the prevention of gross injury committed in the name of the law is made to depend upon the other court being quick enough to overtake and arrest the first in its career of acknowledged injustice, and prevent it from deliberately committing wrong.”

The commissioners who were appointed to inquire into the common-law procedure had reported on the same subject, and the country was deeply indebted to them for their labours. Whatever might be thought of their suggestions respecting the equitable jurisdiction, their recommendations for amending the pleadings and process of the common-law courts would be generally admitted to have been most valuable. During the first nine months after the Procedure Bill of 1852 came into operation, the rules granted by those courts were reduced from 38,009 to 3081, although a greater number of actions were brought and depending. The Common-law Commissioners were Chief Justice Jervis, Chief Justice Cockburn, Mr. Justice Willes, and Baron Bramwell. In their second report, in 1852, the commissioners stated—

“We think we shall not outstep the limits of our commission by so far expressing our opinion, upon what is commonly called the fusion of law and equity, as to say, that, whether or not it may be thought conducive to the despatch of business and satisfaction in the administration of justice to do away altogether with the present division of labour between the courts of law and equity, so far as that division arises out of the diversity of the subject-matters over which either class of courts exercises an exclusive and complete jurisdiction, it appears to us that the courts of common law, to be able satisfactorily to administer justice, ought to possess, in all matters within their jurisdiction, the power to give all the redress necessary to protect and vindicate common-law rights, and to prevent wrongs, whether existing, or likely to happen unless prevented.”

They then went on to recommend specific improvements, on which the present bill was partly founded. On the recommendation of the commissioners, jurisdiction was given to the courts of common law in all cases where there was an equitable defence; but the courts of equity held that suitors were not bound by the judgment where there was power to set up an equitable defence; so that, if judgment were given against them, they might go into a court of equity, file a bill, and have the whole case tried over again. Sir H. Cairns, a great ornament of the Profession, had brought in a bill which did give to the courts of equity the powers that were required to do full justice to suitors who came before them; whereas formerly it was necessary, when a legal question arose, to go into a common-law court, having an issue directed to try the point. Sir H. Cairns' Act enabled the court of equity to decide legal questions arising in an equitable suit; but he was sorry to say that the equity judges were very reluctant to avail themselves of the power, and it was often necessary in an equitable suit to resort to an action in the common-law courts to enforce a legal right, and to incur great additional expense by employing two distinct sets of counsel. In their third report, the Common-law Commissioners—Cockburn, Martin, Willes, Bramwell, and Walton—pointing out the evils and remedies, said:—

“It is our intention and wish that the result of what is proposed should be ingrafted upon, and become part of, the common law, and that the distinction between common law and Chancery law should be so far abolished. If, in addition to this, the Court of Chancery is prohibited from interfering in cases where common-law rights are thus rendered capable of complete vindication in the courts of common law, and in which, therefore, its interference will have become useless, the greater part, if not the whole, of the field of conflict will be done away with, by confining the operation of the courts respectively to subject-matters peculiar to each. Thoroughly to effect this it is necessary to confer upon common-law courts power to give, in respect of rights there recognised, all the protection and redress which at present can be obtained in any jurisdiction, and it is upon this principle that we have acted in our suggestions. If they be carried into effect there will no longer be the spectacle of jurisdictions imperfect in themselves, and clashing with one another, but each court will be armed in itself with exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter within its cognisance, and with full power to give all the protection and redress which the law at present affords by means of a plurality of suits. The conflict of jurisdiction will be done away with, because the occasion for it will no longer exist. We have only to add, that we have given our best attention to the question, whether it is necessary to adopt the procedure of the Court of Chancery in cases where it is proposed to borrow from its remedies; and we have arrived at the conclusion, strengthened by an experience of the working of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, that the desired object can be attained as effectually, and with less expense, by means of the ordinary proceedings of the common-law courts.”

This report having been presented to her Majesty, no time was lost to carry it into execution. The bill, of which he now moved the second reading, had been framed entirely and exclusively on the suggestions of those eminent lawyers, the commissioners. The bill, for which he took no merit, was drawn by Mr. Justice Willes. He had introduced it without altering a single line. It was approved by all the common-law judges; but the equity judges, including the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices Knight Bruce and Turner, signed a memorial against any further fusion of law and equity. He should not ask their Lordships to pass this bill unless the objections of the equity judges could be obviated; and therefore he proposed, if the bill were read a second time, to have it immediately referred to a select committee. Lord Chief Justice Cockburn had assured him, that, after having carefully considered the question, he did not believe those objections to be tenable; and Mr. Justice Willes was of a similar opinion. He should not enter in detail into the provisions of the bill, but he might observe, that in those cases in which a court of equity possessed the right, on fixed principles, to grant relief against the forfeiture of leases, and an ejectment was brought by the landlord against the tenant, relief was sought to be afforded by dispensing with the present dilatory proceedings. The noble and learned lord concluded by moving the second reading of the bill.

Lord St. Leonards observed, that in so far as the bill tended to alter the present system of legal proceedings, it might be characterised as a measure calculated rather to promote the confusion than the fusion of law and equity. He should, in the first place, draw the attention of the House to the fact that the commissioners had not been authorised to make the report which they had done, in reference to equity jurisdiction, inasmuch as their inquiry had been directed to the principles of pleading in the courts of common law, the manner of conducting suits before those tribunals, and other circumstances connected with their proceedings. The commissioners had, therefore, gone beyond the scope of their powers in reporting that it was expedient to give to the courts of common law all the material functions which were now discharged by courts of equity; and this without the slightest necessity. By this process it was supposed that the two different systems would be amalgamated; but all they would do was to take equity from the courts that understood it, and persons competent to administer it, and give it to courts that did not understand it, and persons who were not competent to administer it. If there must be a fusion of the two systems, they must have a code of law drawn up for the purpose. As the law at present existed, no man had ability enough to execute both common law and equity. Let them consider a moment how the courts, the machinery of both systems, stood. There were seven judges in the courts of equity—the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, two Judges of Appeal, and three Vice-Chancellors. How they had answered the purpose intended was proved by the fact that in no country was a system of equity law ever so well or so cheaply administered as in England at present. The Lord Chancellor sat separately; the Master of the Rolls and the three Vice-Chancellors were always sitting. What did the bill propose to substitute for this machinery? The fifteen judges of the common law, whose time was already fully occupied by the business of their own courts. Only a few evenings since the noble and learned lord on the woolsack asked their lordships to agree to the bill for increasing the powers of the judge of the Divorce Court, on the ground that the common-law judges were too much occupied to be able to sit as assistant judges in the Court of Divorce. Then, how was it possible to ask their lordships, without necessity, to transfer the duties of the courts of equity, which they were perfectly competent to execute, to the courts of common law, that could hardly do all their own work? They were quite inadequate to discharge the new duties required of them, or undertake the amount of business that now occupied the six equity courts and the seven judges. The consequence of the change would be, the equity courts would not be fully occupied, and the courts of common-law would be encumbered with too much work. The machinery of the two systems, as at present constituted, enabled each division to discharge its own duties. But he thought, with all respect to the common-law judges, that they were rather too fond of making cases brought before them the subject of reference to arbitration, which was not the case in the Courts of Chancery. It would be found impossible to transfer the business of one set of courts to the other. It was inevitable that the common-law judges should not be learned in the law of equity; yet it was proposed to transfer to them a system of procedure they had never studied, and in which they had not had the practice indispensable to form an equity lawyer. The consequence of referring equity cases to the courts combined must be confusion, and a mass of conflicting opinions. He had the greatest respect for the learning of the common-law judges in their own line, but common-law lawyers themselves would be ready to admit that they were not equity lawyers. If there existed a want of capacity in the judge, insufficient time for dealing with these questions, and a want of adequate machinery for executing the decisions which might be made, with what prospect of success, he asked, could it be proposed to confer equitable jurisdiction on the courts of law? By taking on themselves to act under the provisions of this bill, these courts would frequently be forced to take charge of the money belonging to suitors. In Chancery this portion of the duties of the court had been reduced to a perfect system. All monies were paid in to the Accountant-General, whose office was one of long standing, and who had under him a large staff of clerks, while in the Bank of England there was a large department appropriated to the Court of Chancery, with a view to insure the security of the funds and their due application. Was it intended that there should be a similar large establishment for the courts of common law, or were they to have a repetition of what had already happened, where a suitor, coming to claim his money, found that it had been dealt with by the person to whom it was intrusted? In the case of a fraudulent or improvident trustee the person entitled to the equitable estate would have little difficulty, and would incur comparatively trifling expense, in causing the property to be conveyed into proper hands; but before the common-law judges a fraudulent trustee would be able to make out a much better case; and under the provisions of this bill, the owner, he contended, would be compelled to make good his equitable right, as against the trustee, before it would be competent for the judges to decide on the evidence. The result of the measure, if passed, would be, that the equity courts would sit inactive, while the law courts, with insufficient machinery, time, and information, would be engaged in the attempt to execute imperfectly and ineffectually the business which it was sought to withdraw from the proper channel. As for amending the bill in committee, there was but one thing which could be done with it, and that was to run a pen through all the clauses relating to the equitable jurisdiction. The third report of the Common-law Commissioners proposed that certain equitable powers should be given to the law courts, which they refused to assume, on the ground that they had not sufficient jurisdiction. It was not, however, a want of power on the part of the judges, but a want of determination to execute that power, which prevented them from doing so. The judges found—and nobody was better acquainted with the fact than the noble lord on the woolsack—that they were unable to deal with the subject, and they refused to assume the authority which the act of Parliament had conferred on them. Now, it was proposed, in so many words, that they should have the power which they had before declared they were unable to execute. The bill directed that in cases where the judges found they were not able to do justice they should let the party go to equity. Was ever such a provision heard of? It was proposed, as an improvement on the existing system, that powers should be transferred from the court of equity to a court of law, and, if the latter found itself unable to deal with the cases brought before it, the remedy provided was, that they should be sent back to the very court to which at the present moment they belonged! He maintained, as he had often done, that the tendency of modern legislation was to drive suitors from the uncertainty and conflict of jurisdictions into an arrangement of their suits by way of arbitration. The bill proposed to give to courts of law power to enjoin courts of equity not to give relief; and a more monstrous proposition he had never heard. The noble and learned lord had referred to the example of America, where the equity jurisdiction was at one time in a most unsatisfactory state. The remedy applied was to enable judges of the courts of law to sit also as judges of equity; but that was not a fusion of law or equity—it was a mere confusion of judges. The judges of the Court of Exchequer here had at one time an equity jurisdiction; but the result of their being both law and equity judges was, that the equity jurisdiction was administered so unsatisfactorily that an end was put to it by the unanimous assent of all men, at a vast expense in the way of compensations and retiring allowances. And yet Parliament was now asked to sanction the re-establishment of a system with regard to all the courts of law which had already been tried and failed signally. When this bill was produced it had thoroughly astounded him, and he had no hesitation in saying that his surprise was shared by every lawyer in and out of Parliament. He had suggested to his noble and learned friend on the woolsack to refer it to the working judges of the courts of equity—since the report of which it was the echo was drawn up entirely by common-law judges. That was done, and the report of the Master of the Rolls and the three Vice-Chancellors was now on the table, condemning the bill on every ground. To every word of that report he thoroughly subscribed. The Lords Justices had not been included in the reference, but they had also expressed their opinion in strong condemnation of the bill. Therefore the noble and learned lord on the woolsack—new to the court and to its practice—stood alone against the other six judges of the court, whose lives had been spent in it. A more important question had scarcely ever come before their lordships, and whether the bill were to be referred to a select committee or not, he should certainly take the opinion of the House in the present stage.

Lord Cranworth said he was not at present prepared to say whether the bill would be dealt with better in a select committee, or in a committee of the whole House; but it was very unfair to endeavour to crush the bill at once, merely because some of the details might be objectionable. The object of his noble and learned friend on the woolsack was to enable every court to complete the suit, and to decide finally on every matter brought before it. No one could doubt that it was better that each case should be decided quickly, cheaply, and before one tribunal, rather than before many; and therefore in the object of the bill he entirely concurred. He thought, for instance, that it was manifestly useful that, when an action of ejectment was brought, the court of common law should be able to restrain parties from committing waste, without the necessity of an injunction from the Court of Chancery; and that if, upon an action being brought for forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the money were paid within a certain time, the court of common law should be able to stop the action, in the same way as the Court of Chancery could now do. But with regard to the great bulk of the clauses, he should feel great reluctance in giving his assent. The real practical reason why they could not make a fusion of law and equity was, that one class of subject-matter in litigation required one sort of machinery, and another class required another. If law and equity were fused, all the courts must have the same machinery in order to do justice. As an illustration—if a person died in debt, a creditor might sue the executor at law, and obtain judgment; but then the court of equity would step in, and require all the assets to be collected, and distributed rateably among all the creditors. The courts of common law could not possibly deal with such a case, because they had not the machinery whereby full justice could be done. The question was not whether the judges were equally competent, but whether the courts had equally competent machinery. All the learning and intelligence in the world would not do unless there were the means to collect the assets, and distribute them rateably. On the other hand, there were cases in which it was unjust for the plaintiff to sue at all, yet the defendant could not stop the action without going to the Court of Chancery. It was to meet this state of things that provision was made in the second Common-law Procedure Act, whereby parties were allowed to plead equitable defences, if the court did not feel incompetent to deal with the matter. In the first year after the passing of that act two cases arose which completely illustrated the necessity of the alternative which enabled the courts of common law either to admit or refuse an equitable plea. In the first case an action was brought in which the equitable defence depended on the defendant executing a proper surrender, and doing other acts which the courts of common law had no means of enforcing. In that case, therefore, the plea was not allowed. In the second case an action was brought to recover the value of machinery in a mill. The equitable defence was, that 10,000*l.* had been paid for the mill and machinery, but, by a mistake, the machinery was not mentioned in the bought and sold note. The court of common law could deal with such an issue as that, and the plea was admitted. By this bill it was proposed to enact that a party should be able to obtain an ex parte injunction upon what was called a summons from a judge at chambers. At present such injunctions were only granted by the Court of Chancery, to prevent irreparable mischief, upon a bill and affidavit disclosing all the circumstances both for and against the party applying. No such security would, as he understood the bill, be obtained under the present measure. More than this—it was obvious that an injunction, granted with the view of preventing irreparable mischief to one person, might cause an equal injury to him against whom it was granted. Accordingly it was essential to justice that there should be an immediate and ready means of getting rid of it. Under the present system the Court of Chancery was in theory, and, to a great extent, in practice, always open; but if injunctions were to be granted by judges at chambers during vacation, it might be several weeks before parties considering themselves aggrieved had an opportunity of applying to a court of common law for their dissolution. He had felt it his duty to state his views upon these subjects to their lordships, but, at the same time, the bill contained a great many useful provisions, and he therefore hoped that they would give it a second reading.

Lord Kingsdown said that no bill more important in its consequences than this had ever been laid before their lordships, because, whether rightly or wrongly, it would subvert the system of law which had prevailed in England for above 200 years, and would introduce into the administration of justice a confusion and an uncertainty to which the nation had hitherto happily been a stranger. The distinction between law and equity arose from the circumstance, that any system of jurisprudence which pretended to effect justice must apply different remedies to the assertion of different rights, and to the redress of different wrongs. The evil which was proposed to be remedied by this bill, and which the report of the learned commissioners suggested needed a remedy, was not that the system administered by the Court of Chancery required to be altered, not that it was wrong, not that it failed to do justice, but that it would be more efficiently applied by courts other than those to which its administration was now intrusted. The question was not whether some particular items of improvement might be adopted, but whether the general change, termed "a fusion of law and equity," was in itself desirable; and if so, whether this bill would satisfactorily carry it into effect. He collected from the report of the commissioners, that his noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Cranworth) objected on a former occasion to proposals which were again submitted to their lordships in this measure. In this matter he must say his noble and learned friend had added another to the many acknowledged, or but ill-acknowledged, obligations which the country owed to one who, while he held the Great Seal, unostentatiously discharged his high duties in a manner that might challenge comparison with his predecessors. The provisions of the bill with respect to granting injunctions and the hearing of appeals, instead of diminishing delay and expense, would largely increase them.—After describing the various costly stages through which litigants would have to pass without obtaining a settlement of the questions in dispute between them, the noble and learned lord said he had every respect for the commissioners on whose recommendations the measure was stated to be based; but it was not in the nature of things that they should understand the equitable principles, practice, or pleading which they desired to apply to the common-law courts. It was with surprise he had heard the authority of his learned friend the Attorney-General cited in favour of this bill.

Lord Chancellor.—I quoted, in support of the principle of the bill, his address to the Juridical Society.

Lord Kingsdown continued.—They all knew the precision and accuracy of the Attorney-General; and it was impossible for him to persuade himself that his learned friend had ever given his high sanction to one single clause in this measure. Judging only from the internal evidence of that document, he must say that no man in the slightest degree conversant with the doctrines and practice of a court of equity could give his sanction to such a bill as that. It was said to be desirable that courts of law should possess the jurisdiction by way of injunction now exercised by the courts of equity. And how was it proposed to carry out that object? In the courts of equity an injunction was granted most rarely, and guarded with extreme precautions, in order to restrain the infraction of a right. It was given only in cases where, if withheld, irreparable injury would be done to property. His noble and learned friend said he was responsible for this bill. One could hardly believe that he had ever read its provisions. While professing to confer this jurisdiction on courts of law, instead of confining it as it had been confined by courts of equity, the bill actually extended it to every possible case in which actions for breach of contract or other injury might be brought. All actions at common law were founded either on contract or on tort; and in what cases were courts of law to be empowered to issue writs of injunction? Why, before any proceedings had been taken, "in all cases of threatened breach of contract, or other injury of such a nature that an action at law for damages might be maintained for the same if committed." Was there ever anything so monstrous? Any action for a threatened breach of the peace—the most important or the most trivial—might be the subject of these injunctions, because a court of equity might issue them. Looking through this report, as he was bound to do when told it was the foundation of this bill, he had met with a passage which had rather surprised him, and which he was utterly unable to comprehend. It spoke of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery "to entertain bills technically called bills for new trial." He must say he had never heard of such bills. He should apologise to their lordships for entering into these details, but it was important that the matter should be fully discussed. A good deal had been talked of the fusion of law and equity, but he could not help thinking that there ought to have been a fusion of equity and common-law judges on the commission. He had no apprehension that this bill, or anything like it, could ever by possibility pass into law. He had not much apprehension that this bill would go to the other House of Parliament in its present shape. He confessed he distrusted all these attempts to tamper with the existing legal institutions of the country. Our judicial system was like our legislative system; they were both the native growth of England; they had grown with the growth of the people, and accommodated themselves gradually to their wants. There might be irregularities or a want of symmetry in some parts of the system, but they had combined to give the country a greater share of order, freedom, and security for property than had ever been enjoyed by any other country under the sun; and he did trust their lordships would pause long before they adopted speculative alterations either to impair the efficiency of the courts or endanger the security of property.

Lord Wensleydale entirely agreed in the panegyric pronounced by his noble and learned friend on the woollack on the various commissioners who had considered this subject, but he objected to this bill going so much beyond the original cases in which the equity and common-law courts came in contact with each other. He therefore entirely agreed with the noble lord who first addressed their lordships in opposition to this measure, as to the extreme impropriety of extending the jurisdiction of common-law courts to cases of injunction. The noble and learned lord concluded by observing that he could not concur with his noble and learned friend (Lord St. Leonards) in objecting to the motion for the second reading of the bill.

Lord Chelmsford said he entirely concurred with his noble and learned friends by whom he had been preceded in their opposition to the bill, and added, that when the question which it involved came on for discussion again, it would be desirable that the House should consider whether a measure of such a character ought to be introduced, proposing to effect, as the greater portion of it did, important alterations in the jurisprudence of the country, and adopted, so far as its reference to a select committee was concerned, because it contained certain clauses which were in themselves unobjectionable.

The Lord Chancellor, in reply, said that as the bill was about to be read a second time without opposition, he should not enter into a discussion of the various objections which had been urged against its adoption. He could not, however, help expressing the great surprise which he felt at the statement which had been made by his noble and learned friend who had left the House, (Lord St. Leonards), to the effect that he regarded it as an act of great presumption on the part of the Common-law Commissioners that they should have dared to meddle with the subject. His noble and learned friend, indeed, seemed to look upon the conduct of the commissioners in that respect as the right reverend bench might be supposed to view a proposal for the rejection of the ten commendments; but he should remind the noble lord that the commissioners had been authorised to examine how far the courts of common law might be improved, and that they had come to the conclusion that a great obstacle to that improvement was the want of equitable jurisdiction. The having made a report in accordance with the authority with which they were invested, then, constituted the head and front of their offending; and he could not help adding, that the objections to the bill, which were founded on that report, seemed to him to be based on an entire misapprehension of its meaning; for it did not propose that suits, of whatever character they might be, might be brought indiscriminately before either equitable or common-law tribunals, but that if, incidentally, a question of law arose in a suit in equity, the equity courts might be empowered to deal with it, and vice versa. Any amendments in the bill which might be suggested would, he need hardly say, receive his most careful consideration.

In reply to Lord Chelmsford,

The Lord Chancellor said, when the memorial from the equity judges should be addressed to him he would lay it before the House; and when their lordships had had an opportunity of reading the objections on one side and the other, he should be ready to refer the bill to a select committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LIABILITY OF INNKEEPERS.

Colonel Smyth, in moving for leave to bring in a bill to limit the liability of innkeepers, said that the statute law which now regulated the liability of innkeepers dated from the reign of Queen Elizabeth. By an act passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, an innkeeper was rendered liable for the goods of his guests infra hospitium, but not in the field or adjacent premises. By the common law, innkeepers were bound to receive any guest who presented himself, and if they refused accommodation they were liable to an action and indictment. In former days, when travelling was more tedious and disagreeable, when the roads were frequently infested with highwaymen and robbers, too often acting in concert with innkeepers, travellers were proportionately few, the dangers of the road were great, and the liability of innkeepers was only reasonable. But at the present day, when an innkeeper's house was filled night after night, and for hours in the day, with fresh guests, all strangers to him, it was not, he thought, too much to ask that an innkeeper should only be responsible for goods above a certain value which were actually placed in his charge. His attention was drawn to this subject by a trial at the assizes in the north of England, consequent upon a robbery committed at one of the inns in York. A considerable amount of property was taken from the bedroom of a traveller by a person supposed to have been concealed under his bed. The suspected thief escaped early in the morning, and was apprehended some weeks afterwards, but was not indicted for the robbery, as the evidence did not make a conviction probable. The owner of the lost property, however, brought his action against the innkeeper for restitution. The defence set up was, that the innkeeper was not liable so long as the owner had personal control over his property. The law was, however, differently, and doubtless correctly, laid down by the learned judge who tried the case, affirming the liability of the innkeeper, who had to pay a sum of 200*l.*, besides the value of the lost property—about 500*l.* or 600*l.* It appeared to him that an innkeeper should only be liable for goods exceeding a certain value actually placed in his custody, or delivered to his charge. This limitation of liability was recognised in almost every other business. Common carriers, by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, obtained exemption from unlimited liability. Railway companies had obtained a similar exemption; and it must be borne in mind that such limitation did not supersede, but confined within certain limits, the common-law liability. He now sought to apply that principle to innkeepers. He proposed to make them liable, as at present, for goods up to a certain value, say 40*l.* So far, the present law would be unaltered; but he proposed that the value of goods above that amount should be declared to the innkeeper, and, if necessary, deposited with him for safe custody, in order to make him liable for any loss. Such a system worked well at the railway stations, where luggage was deposited in a safe place, and a ticket given for it during the absence of the owner. Some such arrangement was quite practicable at inns or hotels, and would be advantageous both to the traveller and innkeeper. The traveller would obtain safe custody for his property, and the innkeeper would be relieved from liability beyond a certain amount, unless he had actually charge of the property. He had added a clause giving summary jurisdiction to a magistrate in cases where meat, drink, or lodging had been obtained without the means or intention of paying for them. This fraud could now only be punished by indictment, and was a serious hardship upon innkeepers. He, however, attached the greater importance to the other portion of the bill, by which he hoped to secure to the traveller the safe custody of his goods, and to the innkeeper partial relief from his present liability. The hon. and gallant member then moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the law respecting innkeepers, and to prevent certain frauds upon them.

The motion was agreed to, and leave given to bring in the bill, which was read a first time.

APPEALS COURT.

Doctors' Commons.

This Court will sit on the 2nd and 9th May, at half-past 10 o'clock.

COMMISSIONER TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Joseph George Joel, Gent., of the town and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to be a Commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Chancery in England.

The Board of Inland Revenue have given the following explanations in answer to some inquiries referring to the operation of the new Stamp Act:—"A bill drawn abroad remitted to this country is not liable to any stamp duty until it is negotiated within the kingdom, or presented for payment. If a bill has been negotiated, it has become liable to the duty which was payable at the time when it was first negotiated, and, being at that time duly stamped, it can become chargeable with no other duty, either upon any further negotiation, or upon being presented for payment. But where a bill, which arrived in the kingdom before the recent act, is retained without being negotiated, and therefore without being subject to any immediate charge of duty until after the passing of the act 23 Vict. c. 15, it must upon the first negotiation of it, or, if it be not negotiated, upon being presented for payment, be stamped with the duty imposed by that act."

LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Just published, in 2 vols. royal 8vo., price 2*l.* 8*s.* cloth,
A TREATISE on the LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 5, 1866.

"THERE is no doubt but that all questions upon the rules of evidence are of vast importance to all orders of men: our lives, our liberty, and our property are all concerned in the support of these rules, which have been matured by the wisdom of ages, and are now revered for their antiquity, and the good sense on which they are founded." Such was the opinion expressed by Lord Chief Justice Kenyon upon the law of evidence as it stood sixty years since. Between that time and the present, this revered state of things has been much altered by legislative enactments, whose authors, having demonstrated that the old system was not perfection, boldly attacked and improved upon it.

Taught by experience, the Profession and public are now willing patiently to discuss questions upon this, as on any other branch of the law. It cannot be denied that the rule excluding hearsay evidence, though in general admirably calculated for trial before popular tribunals, may on many occasions lead to a failure of justice. This rule has in consequence been, in certain instances, relaxed. Mr. Pitt Taylor, in the first volume of his work on Evidence, (p. 498), enumerates six classes of exceptions, the sixth of which is, "dying declarations." He observes of them that they are allowed on the ground of the assumed absence of better evidence, and, as it were, from necessity. The exception, then, being admitted, it is curious to observe how its application has been narrowed, so that at the present time it is available but in one single instance. It is essential to the admissibility of these declarations that they should be made by a person in extremis; that there should be at the time of the statement actual danger, (which has been followed by death), and a firm belief that death was impending; and such declarations are, of course, only admitted as to matters to which the declarant would have been competent to testify if he had been sworn in the cause. The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted, according to the language of Lord Chief Baron Eyre, is, "that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone, when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth. A situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath in a court of justice." (Rex v. Woodcock, 1 Leach's C. C. 502). Such reasoning seems to warrant generally the admission of declarations made under the circumstances mentioned above, and does not point to a distinction to be made between civil and criminal cases, or to one set of criminal cases over another. But, notwithstanding that this principle and reasoning are admitted, it appears to be the law that evidence of this description is admissible in no civil case, and in criminal cases only in the single instance of homicide, where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declaration. (Rex v. Mead, 2 B. & Cr. 608). It is this distinction that we think is taken upon no solid ground, and the rejection of this species of evidence in civil and criminal cases generally is not to be supported. The principle of this exception to hearsay evidence being admitted should be admissible generally; if it is denied in civil matters, it is equally liable to objection in criminal; if refused in some criminal cases, still more ought it to be suspected in cases where the prisoner's life is endangered. If excessive caution discards it in the former instance, it ought to make the rule still stricter in the last case. If it is admitted through convenience and necessity in the one acknowledged instance, the same convenience and necessity require its admission in the other cases, where it may be applied with less danger in its results. The reasons, however, for thus restricting the admission of this evidence are given by Mr. Justice Livingston in the American case of Jackson v. Kniffen, (2 Johns. 31). In this case it was sought to get rid of a will by the dying declaration of the testator, which was to the effect that he had been compelled to make his will by duress. This evidence was rejected by three judges to two—the Chief Justice Kent, one of the three, not giving his reasons. Mr. Justice Thomson's reason was, that "to permit wills to be defeated, or in any manner whatsoever impeached, by the parol declarations of the testator, appeared to be repugnant to the genius and spirit of the statute," (the Statute of Frauds); thus avoiding the present question. The third judge was Mr. Justice Livingston, whose observations appear to have greater force, if applied as objections to the quality or weight of the evidence, than to its admissibility. He said that the reasons against its admission were—first, the danger of perjury in fabricating declarations, the truth or falsehood of which it is impossible to ascertain; secondly, the danger of letting in incomplete statements, which, though true as far as they go, do not constitute the whole truth; and, thirdly, the experienced fact, that implicit reliance cannot in all cases be placed on the declaration of a dying person; for his body may have survived the powers of his mind; or his recollections, if his senses are not impaired, may not be perfect; or, for the sake of ease, and to be rid of the importunity of those around him, he may say, or seem to say, whatever they choose to suggest. Mr. Pitt Taylor goes on to say, that as these considerations are thought to counterbalance the force of the general principle, the exception under review is restricted to cases of homicide, and is there recognised on the ground of necessity." For as it often happens that no third person was present as an eye-witness to a murder, and as the party injured, who is the usual witness in other cases of felony, cannot himself be called, it follows, that if his dying declarations could not be received, the murderer might often escape justice. (Jackson v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. 31, 35).

Now, if these three reasons are sufficient, in civil and all criminal cases but that of homicide, to exclude the evidence, they certainly ought to exclude it where its admission jeopardises, not the property or liberty only, but the very life of the fellow-citizen upon his trial, where a miscarriage cannot be remedied. The fact is, if this reasoning is to prevail, the third objection would be conclusive against its admission in this instance also. Then, too, it is said, the necessity of the case requires its acceptance; but the example given is no more conclusive than one in which it was rejected. One of the instances quoted in proof of the proposition contended for by Mr. Pitt Taylor affords an equally potent instance with the one we before mentioned, of the delinquent escaping justice unless the dying declaration is admitted. In Rez v. Hutchinson (2 B. & Cr. 608, note) the prisoner was indicted for administering savin to a woman who was pregnant, but not quick with child, with intent to procure abortion. The woman was dead—her dying declaration was offered—the evidence was rejected; and though the result of the case is not stated in the report, yet it is improbable that any other person could speak to the circumstance. So, at the last Spring Assizes for Gloucester, a person was indicted for using an instrument with intent to procure miscarriage. The woman died. Mr. Justice Keating admitted, subject to review, her dying declarations to the fact. Without them a failure of justice would have ensued. The prisoner was convicted. Was there not an equal necessity in both these cases with the former one for its admission? If death had resulted with sufficient proximity to have justified a charge of manslaughter, whatever his victim had said on her death-bed would have been good evidence against the prisoner; but to charge him with a lesser crime, it is not to be admitted. In truth, the reasons given for confining the exception under review to the one solitary instance mentioned are not sound; but declarations made under the circumstances mentioned in the commencement of this article ought to be admitted in all cases where no other better evidence can be obtained to supply their place. They would be subject to the observations of counsel, and go valeant quantum. The absence of opportunity for cross-examination, the physical and mental condition of the deponent, the accuracy or possible inaccuracy of the relator, and any other notable surrounding circumstances, would be legitimate subjects of observation to the jury, to give weight to or detract from the value of the testimony. If any reason could be found sufficient to exclude this evidence, we should be disposed to put it on the want of a power of cross-examination; but whilst this has great influence on the value of the evidence, yet it ought not so to weigh against the solemnity of the occasion on which it is given as to withdraw it entirely from the consideration of the jury. We do not deny that great caution should always be exercised in the use of this kind of evidence; but it does seem to us that it might be used with less danger in the instances in which it is excluded, than in the one in which it is permitted; for in the latter case the impressions formed have, in all probability, been gathered in a scene of violence, and under circumstances of surprise and confusion, which would lead to mistakes of identity and omission of facts. Our space will not admit, on this occasion, of an examination of the authorities on this question, but a future opportunity may be afforded of shewing that the authorities do not negative beyond dispute the admission of this species of evidence in civil and criminal cases to the extent commonly supposed.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

POWERS OF TRUSTEES, MORTGAGEES, &c.
(LORD CRANWORTH).

Abstract of a Bill intitled "An Act to give to Trustees, Mortgagees, and others certain Powers now commonly inserted in Settlements, Mortgages, and Wills."

Sect. 1. In all cases where, by any will, deed, or other instrument of settlement, it is expressly declared or manifestly intended that trustees or other persons therein named or indicated shall have a power of sale, either generally or in any particular event, over any hereditaments named or referred to in, or from time to time subject to the uses and trusts of, such will, deed, or other instrument, it shall be lawful for such trustees or other persons, whether such hereditaments be vested in them or not, to exercise such power of sale by selling such hereditaments, either together or in lots, and either by public auction or private contract, and either at one time or at several times, or to exchange such hereditaments for any other hereditaments in England or Ireland, (as the case may be), and upon such exchange to give or receive any money for equality of exchange.

2. It shall be lawful for the persons making any such sale to insert any such special or other stipulations, either as to title or evidence of title, or otherwise, in any conditions of sale, or contract for sale or exchange, as they shall think fit, and also to buy in the hereditaments, or any part thereof, at any sale by auction, and to rescind or vary any contract for sale or exchange, and to resell the hereditaments which shall be so bought in, or as to which the contract shall be so rescinded, without being responsible for any loss which may be occasioned thereby, and any such sale may be made although the persons making the same may not have in contemplation any particular re-investment of the purchase money in the purchase of any other hereditaments or otherwise.

3. Power of sale to include powers to enfranchise, to grant licenses to tenants to build, and to make roads and streets, and also (for the purpose of building or improvement) to pull down buildings, and also to demise for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years in possession.

4. For the purpose of completing any such sale, exchange, or enfranchisement as aforesaid, the persons empowered to sell, exchange, or enfranchise as aforesaid shall have full power to convey or otherwise dispose of the hereditaments in question, either by way of revocation and appointment of the use, or otherwise, as may be necessary.

5. The money received upon any sale, or for equality of exchange, or on any enfranchisement as aforesaid, shall be laid out in the manner indicated in that behalf in the will, deed, or instrument containing the power of sale; or if no such indication be therein contained as to all or any part of such money, then the same shall with all convenient speed be laid out in the purchase of other hereditaments in fee-simple in possession, to be situate in England or Ireland, (as the case may be), or of lands of a leasehold or copyhold or customary tenure, which, in the opinion of the persons making the purchase, are convenient to be held therewith, or with any other hereditaments for the time being, subject to the subsisting uses or trusts of the same will, deed, or other instrument of settlement in which the power of sale was contained; and all such hereditaments so to be purchased or taken in exchange as aforesaid, as shall be freeholds of inheritance, shall be settled and assured to the uses, upon and for the trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the powers, provisions, and declarations to which the hereditaments sold or given in exchange were or would have been subject, or as near thereto as the deaths of parties and other intervening accidents will admit of, but not so as to increase or multiply charges; and all such hereditaments so to be purchased or taken in exchange as aforesaid, as shall be of leasehold or copyhold or customary tenure, shall be settled and assured upon and for such trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisions, and declarations, as shall as nearly as may be correspond with and be similar to the aforesaid uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, powers, provisions, and declarations, but not so as to increase or multiply charges, and so that if any of the hereditaments so to be purchased shall be held by lease for years, the same shall not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase who shall not attain the age of twenty-one years; and any such purchase as aforesaid may be made subject to any special conditions as to title or otherwise.

6. Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the persons exercising such power of sale or exchange or enfranchisement as aforesaid, if they shall think fit, to apply any money to be received upon any sale, or for equality of exchange, or for enfranchisement as aforesaid, or any part thereof, in lieu of purchasing lands therewith, in or towards paying off or discharging any mortgage or other charge or incumbrance which shall or may affect all or any of the hereditaments which shall then be subject to the same uses or trusts as the hereditaments sold or given in exchange.

7. Until the money to be received upon any sale, or for equality of exchange, or for enfranchisement as aforesaid, shall be disposed of in the manner herein mentioned, the same shall be invested at interest for the benefit of the same parties who would be entitled to the hereditaments to be purchased therewith as aforesaid, and the rents and profits thereof, in case such purchase and settlement as aforesaid were then actually made.

8. Trustees of leaseholds renewable by contract, custom, or practice, may, and if required must, obtain a renewal.

9. Money required for equality of exchange or for renewal may be paid out of any money subject to the same trust, or may be raised by mortgage of any hereditaments subject to the same trust.

10. No sale or exchange, enfranchisement or purchase, shall be made without the consent of the person appointed to consent by the will, deed, or other instrument; or if no such person be appointed, then of the person entitled in possession to the rents, if under no disability.

11. Nothing in this part of this act shall be deemed to empower any trustees or other persons to deal with or affect the estates or rights of any persons soever, except to the extent to which they might have dealt with or affected the estates or rights of any persons if the deed, will, or other instrument under which such trustees or other persons are hereby empowered to act had contained express powers for such trustees or other persons so to deal with or affect such estates or rights.

12. Where any principal money is secured or charged by deed on any hereditaments of any tenure, or on any interest therein, the person to whom such money shall for the time being be payable, his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall, at any time after the expiration of one year from the time when such principal money shall have become payable, according to the terms of the deed, or after any interest on such principal money shall have been in arrear for six months, or after any omission to pay any premium on any insurance which, by the terms of the deed, ought to be paid by the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, have the following powers, to the same extent (but no more) as if they had been in terms conferred by the person creating the charge; namely,

- (1). A power to sell, or concur with any other person in selling, the whole or any part of the property by public auction or private contract, subject to any reasonable conditions he may think fit, and to rescind or vary contracts for sale, or buy in and resell the same, from time to time, in like manner:
- (2). A power to insure and keep insured from loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of the property (whether affixed to the freehold or not) which is in its nature insurable, and to add the premiums paid for any such insurance to the principal money secured at the same rate of interest:
- (3). A power to appoint, or obtain the appointment, of a receiver of the rents and profits of the whole or any part of the property, in manner hereinafter mentioned.

13. No such sale as aforesaid shall be made until after six months' notice in writing given to the person, or one of the persons, entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of such property; but when a sale has been effected in professed exercise of the powers hereby conferred, the title of the purchaser shall not be liable to be impeached on the ground that no case had arisen to authorise the exercise of such power, or that no such notice as aforesaid had been given; but any person damaged by any such unauthorised exercise of such power shall have his remedy in damages against the person selling.

14. The money arising by any sale effected as aforesaid shall be applied by the person receiving the same as follows—first, in payment of all the expenses incident to the sale, or incurred in any attempted sale; secondly, in discharge of all interest then due in respect of the charge in consequence whereof the sale was made; and, thirdly, in discharge of all the principal monies then due in respect of such charge; and the residue of such money shall be paid to the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, as the case may be.

15. The person exercising the power of sale hereby conferred shall have power by deed to convey or assign to and vest in the purchaser the property sold, for all the estate and interest therein which the person who created the charge had power to dispose of, except that in the case of copyhold hereditaments the beneficial estate or interest only shall be conveyed to and vested in the purchaser by such deed, and thereupon the purchaser of such copyhold hereditaments shall be entitled to be admitted thereto, without any surrender, for all the copyhold or customary estate therein which the person creating the charge had power to dispose of, on payment of all the customary fines, fees, and other payments which would be payable on surrender and admittance; and no lord of a manor shall be bound or entitled to require any further proof of the due exercise of the power of sale hereby conferred than the production of such deeds of charge and conveyance as aforesaid, nor be liable to any action or suit whatsoever by reason of the sale not having been authorised under this act.

16. At any time after the power of sale hereby conferred shall have become exercisable, the person entitled to exercise the same shall be entitled to demand and recover, from the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, all the deeds and documents in his possession or power relating to the same property, or to the title thereto, which he would have been entitled to demand and recover if the same property had been conveyed, appointed, surrendered, or assigned to, and were then vested in, him for all the estate and interest which the person creating the charge had power to dispose of; and where the legal estate shall be outstanding in a trustee, the person entitled to a charge created by a person equitably entitled, or any purchaser from such person, shall be entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate, to the same extent as the person creating the charge could have called for such a conveyance if the charge had not been made.

17. Any person entitled to appoint or obtain the appointment of a receiver as aforesaid may from time to time, if any person or persons has or have been named in the deed of charge for that purpose, appoint such person or any one of such persons to be receiver; or, if no person be so named, then may, by writing delivered to the person, or any one of the persons, entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of the property, require such last-mentioned person or persons to appoint a fit and proper person as receiver; and if no such appointment be made within ten days after such requisition, then may in writing appoint any person he may think fit.

18. Receiver to be agent of owner of equity of redemption.

19. Receiver may sue, distrain, recover, and give receipts in the name of either party.

20. Receiver may be removed, and new receiver may be appointed.

21. Receiver may retain commission, not exceeding 5l. per cent. on the gross amount received, as specified in his appointment; if no amount specified, then 5l. per cent.

22. Receiver, if directed in writing by the person entitled to the charge, to insure.

23. Receiver to pay taxes, rates, and assessments, commission, and premiums of insurances, and then interest; and to pay residue to the person entitled to the property subject to the charge.

24. The powers and provisions contained in this part of this act relate only to mortgages or charges made to secure money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, or to secure an existing or future debt.

25. Trustees with duty to invest may invest in parliamentary stocks or public funds, or in government securities, and vary investments, but with the consent in writing of tenant for life, if any.

26. Where property is held by trustees in trust for an infant, either absolutely, or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event previously to his attaining that age, they may pay to the guardians (if any) of such infant, or apply for or towards the maintenance or education of such infant, the whole or any part of the income of such property, whether there be any other fund applicable to the same purpose, or any other person bound by law to provide for such maintenance or education, or not, and shall accumulate the residue; but may apply accumulations as income.

27. Whenever any trustee, either original or substituted, and whether appointed by the Court of Chancery or otherwise, shall die, or desire to be discharged from, or refuse or become unfit or incapable to act in the trusts or powers in him reposed, before the same shall have been fully discharged and performed, it shall be lawful for the person or persons nominated for that purpose by the deed, will, or other instrument creating the trust (if any), or if there be no such person, or no such person able and willing to act, then for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the acting executors or executor, or administrators or administrator of the last surviving and continuing trustee, or for the last retiring trustee, by writing, to appoint any other person to be a trustee in the place of the trustee so dying, or desiring to be discharged, or refusing or becoming unfit or incapable to act as aforesaid; and so often as any new trustee shall be so appointed as aforesaid, all the trust property (if any) which for the time being shall be vested in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or in the heirs, executors, or administrators of any trustee, shall with all convenient speed be conveyed, assigned, and transferred, so that the same may be legally and effectually vested in such new trustee, either solely, or jointly with the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, as the case may require; and every new trustee to be appointed as aforesaid, as well before as after such conveyance or assignment as aforesaid, shall have the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and shall in all respects act, as if he had been originally nominated a trustee by the deed, will, or other instrument creating the trust.

28. The power of appointing new trustees hereinbefore contained may be exercised in cases where a trustee nominated in a will has died in the lifetime of the testator.

29. The receipts in writing of any trustees or trustee for any money payable to them or him by reason or in the exercise of any trusts or powers reposed or vested in them or him shall be sufficient discharges for the money therein expressed to be received, and shall effectually exonerate the persons paying such money from seeing to the application thereof, or from being answerable for any loss or misapplication thereof.

30. Executors may pay debts or claims upon any evidence that they think sufficient, and accept composition, or security, real or personal, for debts, and allow time for payment, and compound, or submit to arbitration.

31. For the purposes of this act, a person shall be deemed to be entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and income of land or personal property, although his estate may be charged or incumbered, either by himself or by any former owner, or otherwise howsoever, to any extent; but the estates or interests of the parties entitled to any such charge or incumbrance shall not be affected by the acts of the person entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and income as aforesaid, unless they shall concur therein.

32. Powers or incidents hereby conferred not to take effect contrary to or otherwise than subject to express declaration in instrument.

33. The provisions contained in this act shall extend only to persons entitled or acting under a deed, will, codicil, or other instrument executed after the passing of this act, or under a will or codicil confirmed or revived by a codicil executed after that date.

34. This act shall not extend to Scotland.

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon Colin Blackburn, Esq., one of the Judges of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench; also upon James Plaisted Wilde, Esq., one of the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer.

* * In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it." This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 12, 1860.

SINCE our observations on the admissibility in evidence of dying declarations were penned, the case at Gloucester, we alluded to as having given rise to our comment, has come before the Court of Crown Cases Reserved. The Lord Chief Baron, delivering the judgment of the Court, has adhered to the rule in Mead's case; and the prisoner in question, by name Hind, will thus escape; and no one can doubt that a failure of justice has taken place. It is true, the Chief Baron expresses a disapproval of the admission of this species of evidence in any case. This is intelligible ground to take up; but then he supports the rule as narrowed in Mead's case. But we venture to submit that reason and common sense can suggest no distinction by which it should exist in one case, and not in the others. It may be, that in every instance it should be abolished, in every case admitted; but analogy will admit of no other solution of the question; and the only case in which it is retained is the last in which it should be admitted.

We propose to examine the cases on this subject; and it will appear on the face of them that there has been a complete absence of any guiding principle, and some inaccuracy in some of the learned judges; and Mr. Taylor does not seem to have bestowed the same amount of care on his thirteenth chapter that he has on the other portions of his work. Having stated the principle of this exception in the words of Eyre, C. J., quoted by us on a former occasion, he says—"At one time an opinion prevailed that this general principle warranted the admission of dying declarations in all cases, civil and criiminal; and it was expressly held, by respectable authorities, that the dying declarations of a subscribing witness to a forged instrument were admissible to impeach it." What constitutes a dying declaration is afterwards mentioned by Mr. Taylor, quoting, from The Sussex Peerage case, (11 Cl. & Fin. 108, 112), the law as laid down by Lord Denman, to the effect that it is a statement made in extremis and actual danger, with an apprehension of death, (death following). Mr. Taylor gives, in a note, to support his proposition, the cases of Wright v. Littler, (3 Burr. 1255); Aveson v. Kinnaird, (6 East, 188); The Bishop of Durham v. Beaumont, (1 Camp. 210); and Doe v. Ridgway, (4 B. & Ad. 55).

Wright v. Littler was an action of ejectment. The lessor of the plaintiffs claimed under a will dated 1743; the defendant, under an instrument dated 1745. The subscribing witnesses to the latter deed were dead, but a sister of one of them was called by the plaintiffs to prove that he had on his death-bed stated that the latter deed was a forgery, and that the prior will was the true one. This evidence, which with regard to the forgery came out on the cross-examination of the defendant's counsel, was admitted, and a new trial refused, Lord Mansfield upholding its reception, on the ground that as the defendant had the benefit of the deceased's attestation, and as he might have been called if alive, this was to be considered in the light of a cross-examination, and the fact complained of came out on the defendant's own cross-examination.

The next case is Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird, (6 East, 188), in the year 1805. This was an action on a policy of insurance effected on the life of the plaintiff's wife, who had died. The plea was, that she was not in good health, as the plaintiff had stated, at the time of making the policy. The issue was on the truth of the warranty.

A conversation between the deceased wife and one S. L., as to her state of health, when she was not expecting to live, was admitted; a rule nisi was therefore obtained, but was afterwards discharged. Lord Ellenborough took no higher ground than this—that as a surgeon had been called for the plaintiff, to speak to the fact of her being in good health, and as he gave his opinion only, and that opinion was formed upon the answers she made to his questions, his Lordship looked upon what she said upon the same subject to another person as a species of cross-examination; whilst Grose, J., agreed, because he considered her account of herself as the best evidence the nature of the case afforded.

In this same case Lord Ellenborough mentions a case alluded to by Mr. Taylor, in the same connexion:—“One who was an attesting witness to the supposed execution of a bond died, and after his death an action was brought on the bond, and his handwriting was proved; but I then, of counsel for the defendant, was permitted by Heath, J., to give in evidence that the attesting witness had, in his dying moments, begged pardon of Heaven for having been concerned in forging the bond; and I was permitted to do so, on the authority of the case of Wright v. Littler, which I cited. . . Heath, J., admitted the evidence, on the ground, that if the subscribing witness could have been produced at the trial to prove his handwriting to the bond, inasmuch as I might have cross-examined him as to the fact, so I might also prove his declaration of the fact, in contradistinction to the presumption of a due execution of the bond from the proof of his handwriting as a subscribing witness.”

Another case is The Bishop of Durham v. Beaumont, (1 Camp. 210), which was an issue out of the Court of Chancery to try whether a false representation had been made or not; but the real question in this case was, whether, under the circumstances, evidence as to the general character of a witness was admissible; and the only bearing it has on this question seems to be, that Wright v. Littler is mentioned in the judgment.

Mr. Taylor refers also to Doe v. Ridgway, (4 B. & Ad. 55), and the judgment therein of Bayley, J., as explanatory of these decisions. In that case, to prove a pedigree, the dying declarations of a servant of a person through whom the pedigree was traced, as to the relationship of the lessor of the plaintiff to the person last seized, were held not to be receivable in evidence.

Mr. Justice Bayley's explanation of the preceding cases is remarkable. He says, “In the case of Aeson v. Kinnaird the declarations were received upon a very different principle; there they were part of the res gestæ.” He then goes on to say, “And in Tinkler's case the declarations received were those of the person who had taken the poison.” His Lordship then approves of the case of the subscribing witness, and agrees that the benefit of cross-examination ought to be preserved if possible. His Lordship, however, or his reporter, has fallen into a strange error, for Tinkler's case (1 East's P. C. 364) was this:—Margaret Tinkler was indicted for the murder of Jane Parkinson, by inserting pieces of wood into her womb. The woman died, and her account of the matter was received. This case, therefore, would range itself under the rule which admits the evidence in cases of homicide.

In another note to the passage we have quoted, Mr. Taylor has been guilty of some inaccuracy; he says, “It was even held that dying declarations of a pauper respecting his settlement were admissible, though that question involved both law and fact.” (Res v. Bury St. Edmunds, Cald. 496; Abbott v. Dunsell, 2 Bott's P. L. 80). Mr. Taylor adds, “This doctrine is now exploded. (See Res v. Abernilly, 2 East, 63; Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 626).” The cases he quotes in support of the latter proposition by no means bear him out. Res v. Abernilly was a settlement case, in which the sessions had received in evidence a declaration of the pauper, (who had since died), taken on oath before two magistrates; but this was not a dying declaration, but made, for aught that appears, when he was in full health, and years before his death; and the point raised in that case was, whether in such cases the magistrates had jurisdiction to administer an oath, so as to liken it to a judgment, and so bind third parties.

With regard to Stobart v. Dryden, (1 M. & W. 626), it was an action on a covenant in a mortgage deed, to which there was a plea of non est factum. A man named M'Cree, who on the face of the instrument appeared to be the subscribing witness, being dead, the execution of the deed was proved, in the usual way, by evidence of his handwriting, and the identity of the defendant was shewn by proof of his. For the defendant, declarations of M'Cree of facts tending to prove the deed a forgery were offered in evidence. The evidence was rejected. On motion to make the rule absolute for a new trial, the rule was discharged. But that the case did not touch the present is evident from some of the observations of Parke, B., in delivering the judgment of the Court. He says—“But, on the other hand, if any declarations, at any time, from the mouth of subscribing witnesses who are dead, are to be admitted in evidence, (and you cannot stop short of that, for no one contends that the exception is to be confined to death-bed declarations; and if so confined, the evidence would be inadmissible in the present case), the result would be, that the security of solemn instruments would be much impaired.” Of these cases, then, it seems that Doe v. Ridgway (4 B. & Ad. 55) is the only one that narrows the application of this doctrine in civil cases.

With regard, then, to the criminal cases. In Res v. Mead, (2 B. & Cr. 608), (upon which the last case of Reg. v. Hind was founded), the defendant having been convicted of perjury, a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained; whilst that was pending the defendant shot the prosecutor; and on shewing cause against the rule, an affidavit was tendered of the dying declaration of the latter as to the transaction out of which the prosecution for perjury arose. It was not read, because such evidence was admissible only “where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death the subject of the dying declaration.” And Abbott, C. J., considered that it was admissible in Wright v. Littler and the case before Heath, J., because it was a confession of a heinous offence.

And on the same ground was decided Reg. v. Hutchinson, (reported in a note to the last case), where the prisoner was indicted for administering poison to a woman pregnant, but not quick with child, with intent to procure abortion. The woman died, and her dying declarations on the subject were rejected. Then we have a case in Ireland, before Torrens, J., (Gray's case, Ir. Cir. Rep. 76)—an indictment for the murder of Owen Murphy. It was proposed to give in evidence the dying declaration of one Charles Wiley, to the effect that he had committed the murder. It was rejected by the judge, because he thought "that a declaration, to be admissible, must be the declaration of the person injured." In Res v. Lloyd, (4 Car. & P. 232), on an indictment for robbery, a declaration in articulo mortis by the person robbed was rejected, Bolland, B., putting it upon the ground of Res v. Mead; but the prisoners were convicted without this evidence.

Then there is Res v. Baker, (2 Moo. & R. 53), which was a case of poisoning. The poison was administered in a cake, at breakfast, to the deceased. The servant who made the cake, in consequence of an observation of her master, took some of it, fell ill, and on her death-bed stated how she had made the cake, and that the prisoner was at the table on which she made it. This declaration was admitted on the ground that it was part of the res gestæ. In Res v. Pile (3 Car. & P. 568) the declaration was rejected on the sole ground that the child was not under the deep impression of the occasion necessary to make it admissible.

In Res v. Drummond (1 Leach's C. C. 637) the prisoner was indicted for a robbery. The prisoner's counsel informed the Court, during the trial, that a person resembling the prisoner had been recently executed for highway robbery, and that just before his death he had communicated something to the chaplain; and this evidence was rejected, on this ground, that he was an incompetent witness, being an attainted convict, and that as his evidence would not be received if living, it could not be made better by his dying.

Jackson v. Knight (2 Johns. 81, 35) was sufficiently observed upon on a previous occasion; and in The Sussex Peerage case (11 Cl. & Fin. 108) the observations on this subject, so far as they appear to go against this species of evidence, are not made on declarations in extremis.

We have now, we believe, gone through all the cases on this subject.

The result, then, seems to be, that in civil cases, though the reasons given by the learned judges do not support the principle laid down by Mr. Taylor, yet, with the exception of Des v. Ridgway, these dying declarations were always admitted; and that Mr. Taylor has through inadvertence quoted Res v. Aberystwyth and Stobart v. Dryden as exploding the doctrine in settlement cases. That in the criminal cases, with the exception of Res v. Baker, where a new ground is taken, they have been always excluded, with the one exception of homicide. But the consequence of endeavouring to support a groundless distinction is to create confusion; and when we find the several cases put by one judge on one ground, and by a subsequent one on another, we have no guide left to us at all. For instance, Wright v. Lister is decided by Lord Mansfield, because the benefit of cross-examination ought not to be lost, and because a party ought not to complain of evidence given in answer to his questions. The same evidence in the same case is stated by Abbott, C. J., in Res v. Mead, to be admitted because it is as a confession by the declarant of a heinous offence. Then Ateson v. Kinnsaird is put by the judges, who decide it, on the ground of the declaration being the best evidence the case admitted of. But Bayley, J., says it was admitted because it was part of the res gestæ. In the Anonymous case before Heath, J., mentioned by Lord Ellenborough in Ateson v. Kinnsaird, the declaration was stated by him to have been admitted in the place of cross-examination, but by Abbott, C. J., as a confession of a crime. Then, in Gray's case, the declaration was a confession of a heinous offence; but Torrens, J., would not admit it. Then, in Res v. Baker, the declaration was considered to be a part of the res gestæ. If that is a satisfactory reason, the case of Res v. Lloyd might with some shew of reason be argued to come within the same reason. In Drummond's case the declaration was not suggested as admissible on the ground of its being a confession. We believe that when Hind's case comes to be reported, it will be found that the learned judges suggested no reason, beyond a dislike to the admission of the species of evidence under discussion.

We think, then, on the whole, that if this species of evidence is to be admitted at all, it cannot be restricted, in reason, to the single instance of homicide; but, on the other hand, if the solemnity of the occasion is not equal to that of an oath, then neither in the case of homicide, nor in any other, civil or criminal, ought it to be admitted.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I was much struck by an article in your number of the 28th April last upon the subject of extending the remedy of specific performance to cases of contracts to mortgage real estate, instead of confining it, for the purpose in hand, to contracts for sale. But the matter which struck me was the writer's grave misconception of what a mortgage is in the contemplation of a Court of equity. He maintains that a mortgage is "analogous" to a purchase, and is, in effect, "a purchase pro tanto." Now, analogy is defined to be a resemblance of relations, and, in order to see whether a mortgage be or be not "analogous" to a purchase, we must first examine what are the relations to be compared.

The relation of purchaser to the thing purchased is this—the purchase gives a right of absolute property, and immediate, perpetual, specific enjoyment of the thing purchased; and a sale, in like manner, divests forever any right in the vendor to possess or enjoy the thing sold, and gives him instead the property in the purchase money. A mortgage, on the other hand, neither gives, nor is intended to give, any immediate right of property, as such, in the thing mortgaged; nor does it give any property to the mortgagor in the mortgage money: the right given to the mortgagee is a right to be repaid the money secured, and to be repaid, if necessary, by the sacrifice of the mortgaged property. This is universally the rule wherever equity has a full jurisdiction, as in the case of an equitable mortgage, where the rule always was, payment, or sale of the mortgaged property. If a mortgagee enters into possession under his legal title, he still is, in equity, considered as an agent of the mortgagor, liable to account for all he may receive, deducting only his debt, interest, and necessary expenses. The case of foreclosure of a legal mortgage formerly was not a recognition of any contrary principle, but a mere defect of power in the Court of equity, which held that it had no power to interfere, at the suit of the mortgagor, against the common-law right of the mortgagee, unless on the terms of the mortgagor himself doing equity by payment of the debt, &c.; and even this distinction has been done away lately in England, and more than a century in Ireland, by giving the Court power to decree a sale, at the option of either of the parties. The very meaning of saying that a mortgagee is "a purchaser pro tanto" is, that he is the purchaser, not of the "quid" or id quod, but of the tantum quantum—not of the property itself, but of so much money's worth out of the property; he is the purchaser of a right of repayment out of the property—a purchaser of the security, not of that which is the pledge for security. In short, the relation of mortgagee to mortgagor is that of guaranteed creditor to debtor, not of purchaser to vendor.

It was on this ground an old doctrine in equity, that it would never decree a mortgage to be granted, even where there was a contract to execute a legal mortgage part performed, because a mortgage was only a security that the defendant would do what the Court could at once compel him to do, viz. to pay the debt, &c.; and therefore the Court would not decree a mortgage, but would decree payment, and in default of payment, a sale of the property contracted to be mortgaged. The only thing a mortgagee, as such, is entitled to, is payment of his money; if the money is not actually lent, he cannot be entitled to repayment; and this is the case put in the article alluded to. (Rogers v. Challis, 6 Jur., N. S., part I, p. 334). The proposed mortgagee may no doubt be injured by the loss of a good investment; but if so, a claim of damages for such loss is, in the words of the Master of the Rolls, "a mere money demand." I do hope, in opposition to the writer of the article in question, that money will not be wasted in further litigating a point so well decided; and if it be, I apprehend with confidence an affirmation of his Honor's judgment, which I cannot help considering to be founded on true and well-established principles of equity.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Georgic.

THE DIVORCE COURT AND THE COMMON-LAW JUDGES.

THE following is the letter sent by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn to the Lord Chancellor upon this subject, and read by the latter to the House of Lords on the 26th ult. :—

"April 24, 1860.

"My Lord,—Understanding that the bill introduced by your Lordship for remodelling the Divorce Court is about to be discussed in the House of Lords, it occurs to me that it may not be inexpedient that your Lordship should be possessed of the view taken by the judges of this matter after a practical experience of two years.

"I trust, therefore, I am not stepping beyond my province in conveying to your Lordship what I know to be the unanimous opinion of the judges, that the attendance of the common-law judges in the Divorce Court, and their consequent withdrawal from the courts to which they properly belong, cannot be continued without great inconvenience and detriment to the judicial department of the public service; while, on the other hand, no corresponding advantage results to the constitution of the Divorce Court itself.

"The fact is, that at the present time the judicial establishment in the superior courts of common law is not more than barely adequate to the discharge of those duties which were incidental to the judicial office before this new duty was imposed on them.

"For though it is true that the county courts have to a considerable extent relieved the superior courts of a large extent of the lighter and less important cases, yet the amount of business in the latter never was heavier than at the present moment. The increase of population and of commercial and manufacturing activity, the multiplication of inventions and patents, the right recently conferred on the representatives of deceased persons, where loss of life has resulted from negligence, to bring actions for compensation, the facility afforded by railways for bringing causes to London for trial, with other circumstances unnecessary to detail, produce an amount of important business which presses heavily on the Courts; more especially as the modern changes in our procedure, (I allude more particularly to the examination of parties, which leads to the calling of witnesses for the defendant in almost every case, and to the allowing of second speeches to counsel for defendants), while tending materially to promote justice, have, on the other hand, a necessary tendency to prolong proceedings in court, and to occupy time. Besides this, new duties have been thrown on the Courts; for instance, on the Court of Queen's Bench, by the power of appeal from the decision of magistrates in petty sessions, given by the act of the 20 & 21 Vict., which, added to the former appeals from quarter sessions, produces an amount of Crown business which occupies the Court two days a week in every term; on the Court of Common Pleas by the reference to that Court of questions arising on the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, and of appeals from the decisions of revising barristers.

"The effect of the whole is, that the utmost diligence and activity of the judges is no more than adequate to prevent the accumulation of arrears to a serious and mischievous extent.

"In term time it is, as your Lordship is aware, absolutely necessary that Nisi Prius sittings should be constantly going on. One judge in each court being thus employed, four would be left for the sittings in Banco, were it not that during one-half of the day another judge is required to attend at chambers, whereby the number is reduced to three. I trust your Lordship will concur with me in thinking that the number of the judges for sittings in Banco ought not to be reduced below the ancient and accustomed number. It is the unanimity of so many as four judges, or, in the event of difference, the proportion of the majority, which has given so much authority to the decision of these Courts. It is, no doubt, impossible to prevent the number from being at times reduced to three by the incidents to which I have referred; but when it is considered that the Court, on applications for new trials, is practically a Court of appeal from the ruling of single judges, or from the decisions of juries, that it is often called upon to decide difficult and complicated questions of law, and to settle the construction of important acts of Parliament, I feel assured I shall have the sanction of your Lordship's opinion in saying that the number of the sitting judges of each court ought not to be intentionally reduced below three. Yet the withdrawal of one of the judges for the purposes of the Divorce Court has necessarily the effect of reducing the number to two during a portion of every sitting, and in case of absence by ill-health or other casualty, would have the effect of reducing the Court to a single judge, or, as the alternative, of preventing the sitting at Nisi Prius or attendance at chambers.

"Out of term the inconvenience is still greater. The state of the cause lists necessitates, as your Lordship knows, the constant sitting of the two Courts. Attendance at chambers continues to be as necessary as in term. Post-terminal sittings in Banco are indispensable to dispose of the arrears of term business; and at this period occur the sittings of the Court of Error in the Exchequer Chamber, in which the presence of as many judges as possible is most desirable, and less than six ought not to be dispensed with. Any one of these important Courts may be suspended by the withdrawal of two judges (or even of a single one) from their proper and primary duties.

"I have omitted to advert to the sittings of the Central Criminal Court, as well as to the recently established Court of Criminal Appeal, which constitute an additional drain on the strength of the judicial establishment.

"These explanations, of which, fortunately, no one can be better qualified to form a correct estimate than your Lordship, will, I conceive, fully bear out the opinion expressed by the judges as the result of their practical experience.

"Equally strong and general is the opinion that the expenditure of judicial force involved in the attendance of the judges in the Divorce Court is, for the most part, pure waste, uncompensated by any advantage to the administration of justice in that court. The great majority of cases dealt with in the Court of Divorce are either undefended, or the facts are too clear to admit of doubt, or, at all events, the question to be decided is one of fact alone, determinable by the evidence, and with which a judge, or a judge and jury, are perfectly competent to deal, just as the latter would before have been in an action for criminal conversation, or a judge would have been in a suit for divorce in the Ecclesiastical Court. Collusion, the apprehension of which excites so much alarm in these cases, occurs, I am satisfied, much less frequently than seems to be supposed. Where it does, the sagacity and acuteness of one competent judge, especially of so eminently distinguished and able a judge as Sir Cresswell Cresswell, may well be expected to detect and frustrate it. At the same time, as cases will no doubt at times occur involving more than ordinary difficulty, and in which the Judge Ordinary may desire assistance, if in such cases no other means can be resorted to for strengthening the Court than the having recourse to the judges, of course the latter must do their utmost to render the required assistance, so far as this can be made consistent with the exigencies of their more immediate duties. What they at present object to, and strongly feel, is the idle waste of their time, imperatively called for elsewhere, in sitting to hear causes in which there is neither necessity nor occasion for their taking part at all. At all events, they confidently trust that the Legislature will relieve them from attendance on the Divorce Court, except where the Judge Ordinary requires their aid, or where appeals are brought against his decisions.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord,

"Your obedient and faithful servant,

"A. E. COCKBURN."

"To the Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor."

An American lawyer, Jeremiah Mason, was engaged in the defence of a Methodist minister, by name Avery, on a charge of murder. The professional character of the prisoner interested deeply his brother ministers, who in numbers attended the trial. The case was very serious, and the advocate was absorbed in intently watching the progress of the evidence, carefully noting it, and observing its effect on the jury, when one of these ministers, who would now be called a spiritualist, was led to his side, and, in great agitation, said, "Mr. Mason, Mr. Mason, I have most important matter to communicate. The Archangel Gabriel came to my bedside this morning, and told me that Brother Avery was innocent." Without lifting his eyes or his pen from the paper, Mason replied, "Let him be subpoenaed immediately!" and continued his work.—The Bar of Philadelphia—The Quarterly Review, April, 1860.

BUILDING LAND, KENSINGTON GORE.—

To be SOLD or LET, PLOTS of very valuable BUILDING LAND in the immediate vicinity of the projected Horticultural Gardens, Kensington Gore, and surrounded by first-class mansions, of noble elevation, recently erected. The roads and sewers are made, and leases would be granted for terms of ninety-one years at moderate ground-rents. The land is most eligible situated, and well adapted for the erection of first-class residences, and, from its close proximity to the new Horticultural Gardens, Hyde Park, and Kensington Gardens, and from the general character of the adjacent property, the mansions erected will always command a ready sale, and a large and improving rental. For particulars apply to Messrs. Tucker & New, Solicitors, 25, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.

FREEHOLD GROUND-RENTS.—To be SOLD, by PRIVATE CONTRACT, to pay 4l. per Cent., valuable FREEHOLD GROUND-RENTS, amounting to 815l. per annum, secured on noble first-class mansions, Nos. 3, 13, 27, and 41, in Victoria-street, Westminster, most substantially built, and producing gross rentals of about 5000l. per annum. The ground-rents are paid with the greatest regularity by a public company of high standing.

The present opportunity offers to trustees, capitalists, and others, investments of the highest class. For particulars apply to Messrs. Tucker & New, Solicitors, 25, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.

UPPER EAST SHEEN, near the Inns of Court Volunteers' Butt.—To be SOLD, or to be Let on Lease, separately or otherwise, on the Temple Sheen Estate, near Sheen Common, and close to Richmond Park, Surrey, within seven miles of Hyde Park-corner, FOUR substantially brick-built HOUSES, containing lofty and commodious dining and drawing rooms, morning-room, vestibule, and entrance-hall, with noble stone staircase and conservatory, six bed-rooms, dressing-room and nursery, bath, the requisite closets, and the usual domestic offices; and with large gardens, good drainings, amply supply of excellent water, and gas laid on. The locality is particularly dry and healthy, with gravel and sand subsoil, and commands extensive views. For further particulars apply to Mr. J. Turner, Solicitor, 9, Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn, W. C.; or Mr. E. Bazendale, Architect and Surveyor, 7, Beaufort-buildings, Strand, W. C.; or to Mr. Price, Clerk of the Works, on the Estate.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 19, 1860.

SIMPLICITY and cheapness in conveying or otherwise dealing with property, if one may judge by the numerous attempts at legislation having this object in view, would seem to be one of the great wants of the age.

Few of these attempts have been very successful, and it is at any rate doubtful whether our laws relating to real property, or the present system of conveyancing, will be much improved by the interference of the Legislature.

We do not think that the number of those persons is great among the owners of property who would desire so far to alter our institutions as to abolish entails, or the law of primogeniture, or to take away from the owners the complete power of disposing of property inter vivos or by will, subject only to those restrictions such as the rule against perpetuities and the Mortmain Act have wisely interposed. Still less do we think that any man with a reflecting mind would wish to render the subdivision, especially of landed property, compulsory. The state of France, where revolutionary laws have given the greater part of that country into the hands of small pauper proprietors, will, we should think, be sufficient to deter England from making any alteration of the laws having even a tendency or leaning in the same direction. This feeling, in all probability, will prevent such members of our Legislature as Mr. Locke King ever prevailing upon a majority of the House of Commons, as at present constituted, to assimilate the devolution of real property on intestacy to that of personal property; for although the owner of real property would still have power to keep it together by will or settlement, still such a change in the law would be an important step towards a compulsory division of real property on the owner's death.

As long, however, as the owners of property are allowed to dispose of it (subject to the restrictions already mentioned) as they please, they will doubtless endeavour to keep it as long as they possibly can undivided in the head for the time being of their own family; or, in other words, put it into settlement by a mode more or less strict. This naturally leads to some complexity in the forms of conveyancing necessary in order to carry their wishes into effect; and the system invented by a succession of learned and able lawyers in this branch of the Profession is most admirably adapted for this purpose. For while life interests only are given to some persons in property put into settlement by will or deed, the inconveniences which might result from the limited nature of such estates, or from other estates of a higher nature being vested in infants, are overcome by the machinery of trusts and powers of different kinds, whereby the property may be dealt with in as complete a manner, for all useful purposes, as if it were vested in an owner in fee-simple of full age, with this sole exception, that it cannot be dissipated, and lost to the family. Hence powers of leasing, powers of sale and exchange, of enfranchisement, of raising money for portions, jointures, &c., of giving receipts, of appointing new trustees, are introduced into instruments putting land into settlement. The insertion of these powers and other provisions in settlements and wills necessarily leads to the result that they are lengthy and somewhat expensive. Hence law reformers have endeavoured to hit upon some plan by which the length, and consequently the expense, of such instruments may be diminished.

Some years ago Lord Brougham, we believe, induced the Legislature to pass two acts—the first, (8 & 9 Vict. c. 119), intitled “An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Real Property;” and the second, (8 & 9 Vict. c. 124), intitled “An Act to facilitate the granting of certain Leases”—which endeavoured, by means of references in deeds to certain forms comprised in the schedules of these acts, to incorporate them with, and make them in effect part of, such deeds.

As might have been expected, these acts have become a dead letter; and we fully agree with a late eminent conveyancer, who, in commenting upon them in somewhat severe terms, says—“In common sense every instrument should be perfect in itself, and should not have its construction dependent on another instrument. By this contrivance, in few cases more than a skin of parchment would be saved. This trifling additional expense is better than the uncertainty of construction to which a conveyance or lease, referring to the acts, would be subject in unskilful hands*.”

Undeterred, however, by the fate of these measures, Lord Cranworth has brought another before the House of Lords founded upon the same principle. It would be a bold thing to prophecy that it will pass through Parliament this session, even if its utility be undoubted and its composition unexceptionable. Upon the last subject we will not make any remark; with regard to the former—the utility of the measure—we must express grave doubts.

The object of the bill, like all Lord Cranworth's attempts at legislation, is laudable; the result, we fear, will not answer his expectation. The object of the bill is to make certain powers and provisions which it is now usual to insert in settlements, mortgages, wills, and other instruments, incident to the estates of the persons interested, so as to dispense with the necessity of inserting the same in terms in every such instrument.

The bill proposes to give the mortgagee, independent of contract, power to sell, to insure, and appoint a receiver.

There are other provisions of a similar character, as to investments by trustees, maintenance of infants, the appointment of new trustees, trustees' receipts, &c.

It is proposed, moreover, that none of the powers conferred by the bill should be exercisable if the instrument declared they should not take effect, and that they should be subject to any variation or limitation declared by the deed.

With regard to the principle of the bill, we must confess that we have no high opinion. Assuming, what is most unlikely to be the case, that it becomes the law of the land during this session, or, what is possible, but not perhaps very probable, that it may meet with more success in some subsequent year of the reign of Queen Victoria, what will be its result? Undoubtedly one will be, that in all future instruments intended by Lord Cranworth to be affected by it, there will be introduced, by every careful conveyancer, a clause providing that “none of the powers conferred by — & — Vict. c.—, shall be exercisable by any of the parties hereto.” A careless conveyancer may forget that clause, and the endeavours of our Courts of law and equity to construe the clauses in the instrument, in conjunction with the clauses in the act, will be interesting, and may even in some cases be expensive.

In fine, we think, that even if the provisions of this measure were adopted by conveyancers, the saving thereby effected would be but small; and it would be a great inconvenience to trustees to be compelled to have resort to an act of Parliament, not always accessible, to inform them what are their powers and duties, instead of finding them clearly defined within the four corners of the instrument under which they act.

Again: the forms of powers conferred by instruments require to be often modified in order to meet with the varying exigencies of different circumstances, persons, and things. This may be readily done by a skilful conveyancer in a single instrument; but if it is attempted to graft provisions in an instrument upon others in an act of Parliament, it will tend only to litigation, for if their construction may not altogether puzzle our Courts, trustees may not be inclined to act, except under their direction, order, or advice.

Even if this bill passes—even if it may obtain the praises of the Profession—we may safely predict that we shall have to say of it as of meritorious virtue, “laudatur et alget.”

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Principles of the Law of Evidence, with Elementary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-examination of Witnesses. By W. M. BART, Esq., A.M., LL.B., of Gray's Inn, Barrister at Law. Third Edition. [Sweet, 1860.]

No branch of legal science receives so much light from philosophical investigations, and a study of human nature in its ever-varying phases, as that which relates to “evidence,” considered with reference to its principles, and also to its practical application to judicial inquiries. The obvious reason is, that it involves in itself that which is at the root of all science, the mode of arriving at the truth, but not abstract truth, nor for speculative purposes; on the contrary, truth affecting the interests of man in their most tangible and practical form, and to be generally extracted from living men, who are more or less biased upon the subject, and who enter the witness-box as an arena where they contest for personal advantage and personal victory. Hence, also, the law of evidence possesses more interest for the general reader than other parts of our system of jurisprudence, and at the same time requires for its treatment the combined qualities of a jurist and philosopher.

These qualities are united in an eminent degree in the learned author of the present work—a work which requires no praise at our hands, for it has already attained the honours of a third edition, and has, in fact, become a standard book, both in our law courts and our libraries.

Since the former edition, the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854 has come into operation, and its provisions affecting the subject of evidence are fully incorporated and considered. (See, for instance, book 4, part 1, c. 1, upon inspection of documents, and exhibiting of interrogatories).

* Brodie on the Tax on Succession and Burthens on Land, &c., pp. 69, 70, (8vo., 1850).

Important and valuable as are the alterations introduced by this enactment into our system of judicial evidence, yet, as Mr. Best observes in his Preface, "it would be a great mistake to look upon it as effecting a revolution in that branch of our jurisprudence, or as constituting a starting-point in its future history; for, in the first place, that statute does not apply to criminal law, and many of its provisions are restricted to the superior courts of law at Westminster. Again: the statute has introduced no new principles; on the contrary, the Legislature by which it was passed recognised the soundness of those pervading the existing system, and directed their attention solely to its improvement and perfection—thus following the just and enlightened maxim of Lord Bacon—'Antiquity deserveth that reverence, that men should make a stand thereupon, and discover what is the best way; but when the discovery is well taken, then to make progression.'"

The analytical table at the commencement of former editions has been distributed among the respective chapters of the book, and the index has been made very full and precise.

THE ANCIENT WILLS OF THE PREROGATIVE COURT.

A RECENT discussion in the daily papers on the custody of the wills in the Prerogative Court recalls to my mind a suggestion that I ventured to make privately some years ago, which, if adopted, would at once relieve the registry of much of its burthen, prove of incalculable benefit to biographical research, and, I apprehend, not interfere in any appreciable degree with a single vested interest. It is this—remove all wills proved before the end of the seventeenth century, and the massive volumes containing the copies of them, to the British Museum. Their vast utility in that institution would be unquestionable. Where they now are, they are virtually inaccessible to literary inquirers, and of no use to anybody else.

The fees taken for searches into these ancient wills must be something very trifling, and probably such searches are more plague than profit to the officials. At all events, on the few occasions on which I have had copies of early wills made for literary purposes, the difficulty of transcribing satisfactorily has occasioned me anything rather than a sympathetic reception. The fact is, that the registry is for the use of lawyers, not of literary inquirers; and the sooner the domains of the two are divided the better for both parties.

The only real difficulty in carrying out the details of this plan would arise from the question of legal evidence, in the event of any wills proved before the year 1700 being required for legal purposes. Such occasions must be exceedingly rare, and they could easily be provided for by enacting that the original ancient wills, when in the British Museum, should be consulted only under some special restrictions, and should still retain their legal value. As a general rule, the volumes of copies would suffice for literary purposes.

Take, for example, Shakespeare's will. To suppose that that document can ever be required in a court of law is a transparent absurdity. The entail created by it was barred, and the property dispersed, nearly two centuries ago, and now only a small portion of it could even be identified. Well, that will has never been satisfactorily edited. I had the utmost difficulty even in seeing it, and positively was compelled to have recourse to the expedient of ordering an office copy, in the hope of so being allowed to collate it.

This bugbear of preserving legal evidence intact may be the means of destroying the great poet's will. It is written on three separate sheets, fastened at the top, in a fashion common to old law papers, so that it can hardly be consulted without handling it in a manner that gradually but surely injures the papers. The rules of the office forbid their separation; but the public would surely be better satisfied if this document—one of the most interesting that could be submitted to an Englishman or American—were deposited in the British Museum, each sheet carefully preserved between plates of glass, (as is the case with the Blackfriars deed, so admirably contrived for exhibition in the Guildhall Library), and so made accessible to all, with perfect safety to the original, instead of its being, in its present depository, inaccessible, and, as it would seem, not in the best state of security.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

EASTER TERM, 1860.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

George Peter Allen, aged twenty-five, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Lawford, of Drapers'-hall, London; and Messrs. Lawford & Waterhouse, of Drapers'-hall, London.

Willett Ram, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Simon Batley Jackaman, of Ipswich; and Messrs. Aldridge & Bromley, of Gray's-inn, London.

Henry Handson, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Dabbs, of Stamford; and Messrs. Parker, Rooka, & Parkers, of Bedford-row, London.

Joshua Tovell Beard, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Newman & Harper, of Hadleigh; and Messrs. Cree & Last, of Gray's-inn, London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Allen, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Ram, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Handson, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Beard, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names (with the exception of that of Mr. Mayhew, whom the Examiners think deserving of especial notice) are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Walter Mayhew, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Mayhew, of Wigan.

Nicholas Brooking, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Robert Francis, of Newton Bushel, Devonshire; and Messrs. Church, of Bedford-row, London.

George Alfred Daniel, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Wilson Clement Crutwell, of Frome; and Messrs. Church, Langdale, & Prior, of Southampton-buildings, London.

Benjamin Dowson, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Enfield, of Nottingham; and Messrs. Sharpe, Field, & Jackson, of Bedford-row; and Messrs. Field & Roscoe, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, London.

John Samuel Bedford Glasier, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Thomas Tweed, of Lincoln; and Mr. George Tash Tweed, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, and Messrs. Jones, of Millman-place, London.

William Septimus Harding, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Ryland & Martineau, of Birmingham; and Messrs. Sharpe, Jackson, & Parker, of Bedford-row, London.

Henry Houseman, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Tylee, of Essex-street, London.

John Griffith Jones, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Richard James, of Llanrwst; and Messrs. Hawkins, Bloxam, & Hawkins, of New Boswell-court, London.

John William Middleton, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Middleton, of Leeds.

Henry Leigh Pemberton, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Pemberton & Meynell, of Whitehall-place, London.

Henry Russell, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Alfred Russell, of Dartford; and Messrs. Lawrance, Plews, & Boyer, of Old Jewry-chambers, London.

Dennis Brown Squire, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Worship, of Yarmouth; and Mr. Henry Palmer, of Yarmouth; and Messrs. Sudlow, Torr, Janeway, & Tagart, of Bedford-row, London.

William Benford Tanner, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Tanner, of Speenhamland, Berkshire; and Messrs. P. & W. B. Nelson, of Essex-street, London.

John Bird Taunton, LL.B., aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Bolton & Filder, of Lincoln's-inn, London.

James Henry Taylor, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Taylor, of Manchester; and Mr. Adam Fox, of Manchester.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidate that his answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled him either to a prize or a certificate of merit, if he had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Charles Joseph Eldred, aged thirty-five, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Thomas Grover, of Great James-street, London.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 117; of these 110 were passed, and 7 postponed.

By Order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, May 10, 1860.

BILLS IN PROGRESS.

LIABILITY OF INNKEEPERS BILL.

(COLONEL SMYTH, MR. ROBBUCK, AND MR. EDWARD EGERTON).

A Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Law respecting the Liability of Innkeepers, and to prevent certain Frauds upon them."

Preamble.

Sect. 1. No innkeeper shall hereafter be holden to be responsible for goods or property of his guests where the value thereof exceeds 40*l.*, except for such as may be deposited with such innkeeper expressly for safe custody; and where such goods or property shall be so deposited for safe custody, it shall be lawful for such innkeeper to require that each article thereof shall be exhibited to him, and its value declared to him.

2. Where goods or property are so deposited with and exhibited to an innkeeper, and the same are afterwards stolen or lost, such innkeeper shall not be concluded by the price or value set thereon by the guest as is aforesaid, but it shall be incumbent on such guest to prove the actual value of the same.

3. And whereas frauds are frequently practised upon innkeepers by persons fraudulently seeking meat, drink, or lodging in their inn without having the means of paying for the same: be it enacted, that if any person shall obtain from an innkeeper any meat, drink, or lodging without having the means of paying for the same, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace, upon complaint thereof made to him, to cause such person to be brought before him, or before some other justice of the same jurisdiction, by summons, or, if necessary, by warrant, and after hearing evidence of the matter of such complaint, and of what may be alleged by way of defence, it shall be lawful for such justice of the peace to order such person forthwith to pay to such innkeeper a sum equal to the amount of the debt which shall have been proved to be owing to him, together with the costs of such proceeding, to be levied upon such person's goods, (if he have any); and if he have none, or if the goods he may have be not sufficient to pay such debt and costs, it shall be lawful for such justice of the peace to commit such person to the gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding two calendar months, or until such debt or costs shall be sooner paid.

4. The words and expressions hereinafter contained which, in their ordinary signification, have a more confined or a different meaning, shall in this act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows; that is to say, the word "innkeeper" shall mean the keeper of any hotel, inn, tavern, public-house, or other place of refreshment; and the word "property" shall mean money, securities for money, title deeds, precious stones, jewellery, wearing apparel, goods, wares, merchandise, chattels and effects, animals, and things of every description, and the receptacles for the same.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD OR DRINK.

Abstract of a Bill intituled "An Act for preventing the Adulteration of Articles of Food or Drink."

Sect. 1. Every person who shall sell any article of food or drink with which, to the knowledge of such person, any ingredient or material injurious to the health of persons eating or drinking such article has been mixed, and every person who shall sell expressly warranted as pure or unadulterated any article of food or drink which is adulterated or not pure, shall for every such offence, on a summary conviction of the same before two justices of the peace in England and Scotland, or before justices at petty sessions or a divisional justice in Ireland, forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 5*s.*, together with such costs attending such conviction as to the said justices shall seem reasonable; and if any person so convicted shall afterwards commit the like offence, it shall be lawful for such justices to cause such offender's name, place of abode, and offence to be published, at the expense of such offender, in such newspaper or in such other manner as to such justices shall seem desirable.

2. On the hearing by the justices of any complaint under this act, in any district, county, or borough wherein any analyst shall have been appointed, the purchaser shall prove to the satisfaction of such justices that the seller of the article of food or drink alleged to be adulterated, or his servants, had such notice of the intention of the purchaser to have such article analysed, and also such opportunity of accompanying the purchaser to an analyst appointed by this act, as the justices shall think reasonable, in order to secure such article from being tampered with by the purchaser.

3. In England, the vestries and district boards acting in execution of the Act for the better Local Management of the Metropolis, the court of quarter sessions of every county, and the town council of every borough having a separate court of quarter sessions, and the commissioners of supply at their ordinary meetings for counties in Scotland, and town councils within their several jurisdictions, may, from time to time, for their respective districts, counties, or boroughs, appoint and remove one or more persons possessing competent medical, chemical, and microscopical knowledge, as analysts of all articles of food and drink purchased within the said metropolitan districts, counties, or boroughs, and may provide a convenient office, and all necessary accommodation and materials, for the execution of the duties of such analysts, and may pay to such analysts such salary or allowances as they may think fit.

4. Any purchaser of any article of food or drink in any district, county, or borough in England, where there is any analyst appointed under this act, shall be entitled, on payment of a sum not less than 2s. 6d. nor more than 10s. 6d., to have any such article analysed by any analyst who may be appointed for such district, county, or borough, and to receive from such analyst a certificate of the result of his analysis, specifying whether in his opinion such article is adulterated, and also whether it is so adulterated as to be injurious to the health of persons eating or drinking the same; and such certificate, duly signed by such analyst, shall, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be sufficient evidence before the justices, or in any court of justice, of the matters therein certified, and the sum so directed to be paid for such certificate shall be deemed part of the costs.

5. The justices before whom any complaint may be made under this act may, in their discretion, cause any article of food or drink to be examined and analysed by such skilled person as they may appoint for that purpose, who may be required to give evidence of the same at the hearing of the case; and the expense thereof, and of such examination and analysis, if not paid by the complainant or party complained against, shall be deemed part of the expenses of executing this act; but nevertheless such expense may be ordered by such justices to be paid by the party so complaining or complained against, as they shall think proper.

6. Appeal to quarter sessions.

7. Where conviction within six days of quarter sessions, time allowed for appeal.

8. The provisions in the Nuisances Removal Act for England, 1855, as to procedure, and the provisions of the act of the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace and of Session, within England and Wales, with respect to Summary Convictions and Orders, and ordinary Rules regulating the Procedure of Justices of the Peace in Scotland," so far as the same are respectively applicable, shall extend and apply to cases arising under this act in England or Scotland; and all monies arising from penalties under this act, in any district or borough where there are analysts appointed under this act, shall, when paid or recovered, be paid to the vestry, district board, county treasurer, or town council for such district or borough respectively, to be applied for the general purposes of such vestry, district board, county, or borough respectively, or to the collector of rogue money for each county in Scotland.

9. Proceedings as to complaints, &c. in Ireland to be subject to the provisions of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, and Petty Sessions Clerk (Ireland) Act, 1858.

10. Appeal to quarter sessions.

11. Costs of executing act.

12. In the construction of this act, the words "articles of food or drink" shall (if not inconsistent with the context or subject-matter) include not only all alimentary substances, whether solids or liquids, but also all eatables or drinkables whatsoever, not being medical drugs or articles usually taken or sold as medicines; but this act shall not be construed so as to affect the ordinary reduction of the strength of foreign, British, or colonial spirits, by persons licensed and paying duties under the excise.

SELLING AND HAWKING GOODS ON SUNDAY BILL.

(AS AMENDED ON RE-COMMITMENT).

Abstract of a Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the selling and hawking of Goods on Sunday within the Metropolitan Police District and City of London and Liberties thereof."

Sect. 1. No person shall on Sunday, within the metropolitan police district, or within the city of London or liberties thereof, sell, or offer or expose for sale, or cause to be sold, offered, or exposed for sale, in any shop or other building, any wares, merchandise, or things whatsoever, (except as hereinafter excepted); and any person who shall commit any such offence, and shall be convicted thereof before a police magistrate or any two justices of the peace, shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 20s. nor less than 5s., as shall be adjudged by such police magistrate or justices: provided always, that no person who has not before been convicted of any offence against this act shall be liable to more than one penalty for any offence against this act committed on one and the same day.

2. No dealer in meat, fish, poultry, or vegetables within the metropolitan police district, or within the city of London or liberties thereof, shall on Sunday, after the hour of ten o'clock in the morning, deliver or cause to be delivered, in the way of his trade, any meat, fish, or poultry, (except as hereinafter excepted); and every person who shall be convicted of any such offence before a justice of the peace shall be liable to the same penalties as are hereinbefore enacted against the selling, offering, or exposing for sale of goods on Sunday.

3. If any person, having been convicted for the first time of any offence against the provisions of this act hereinbefore mentioned, shall afterwards be guilty of any such offence, and shall be convicted thereof before a police magistrate or any two justices of the peace, every such person shall, for every such subsequent offence, be liable to any penalty, not exceeding 40s. nor less than 10s., for every separate act of selling, offering, or exposing for sale or delivering, which may take place or be made on one and the same day, as shall be adjudged by such police magistrate or justices.

4. No person within the metropolitan police district, or within the city of London or liberties thereof, shall on Sunday hawk, cry, sell, offer, or expose for sale any wares, merchandise, or things whatsoever, on any open ground or in any public street, lane, thoroughfare, or other open place apart from the residence of the person so offending, (except as hereinafter excepted); and any person who shall commit any such last-mentioned offence, and shall for the first time be convicted thereof before a justice of the peace, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 5s. for any offence or offences against this act committed on one and the same day.

5. If any person, having been convicted for the first time of any offence against the provisions of this act in the last preceding section mentioned, shall afterwards be guilty of any such offence, and shall be convicted thereof before a police magistrate or any two justices of the peace, every such person shall for every such subsequent offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5s. for every separate act of hawking, crying, selling, offering, or exposing for sale which may take place on one and the same day, as shall be adjudged by such police magistrate or justices.

6. The term for which a person convicted of any first offence against this act may be committed to the house of correction or common gaol shall not exceed one calendar month.

7. The provisions of this act shall not apply—

To the selling, offering, or exposing for sale of any medicine, drug, or other article for medicinal purposes;
Nor to the selling, offering, or exposing for sale, without public cry, of any meat, fish, poultry, or vegetables before the hour of ten o'clock in the morning;
Nor to the selling, offering, or exposing for sale, or hawking or crying, of any milk or cream before the hour of ten o'clock in the morning, or after the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon;

Nor to the exercise of the ordinary and lawful business of a pastrycook, nor to the selling, offering, or exposing for sale, without public cry, of any fruit or pastry, or of any beverage which may by law be ordinarily sold without license, before the hour of ten o'clock in the morning, and after the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon;

Nor to the selling, offering, or exposing for sale, without public cry, of any periodical publication, before the hour of ten o'clock in the morning, and after the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon;

Nor to the exercise of the ordinary and lawful business of a cook-shop, coffee-house, or eating-house keeper;

Nor to the exercise of the ordinary and lawful business of a baker, licensed victualler, or keeper of any inn, tavern, hotel, public-house, or other house licensed for the sale of beer or of exciseable liquors.

8. No servant who shall act in violation of this act by or under the direction of his employer (the proof whereof shall be upon such servant) shall be liable to any penalty under this act; but in every such case the person by or under whose direction such servant shall have so acted shall be deemed to have himself offended against this act, and be punishable accordingly.

9. Proof of previous convictions.

10. Appropriation of penalties.

11. Limitation of proceedings, seven days.

MAY 26, 1860.

UPPER EAST SHEEN, near the Inns of Court Volunteers' Butt.—To be SOLD, or to be Let on Lease, separately or otherwise, on the Temple Sheen Estate, near Sheen Common, and close to Richmond Park, Surrey, within seven miles of Hyde Park corner, FOUR substantially brick built HOUSES, containing lofty and commodious dining and drawing rooms, morning-room, vestibule, and entrance-hall, with noble stone staircase and conservatory, six bed-rooms, dressing-rooms and nursery, bath, the requisite closets, and the usual domestic offices; and with large gardens, good drainings, amply supply of excellent water, and gas laid on. The locality is particularly dry and healthy, with gravel and sand subsoil, and commands extensive views. For further particulars apply to Mr. J. Turner, Solicitor, 9, Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn, W. C.; or Mr. E. Baxendale, Architect and Surveyor, 7, Beaufort-buildings, Strand, W. C.; or to Mr. Price, Clerk of the Works, on the Estate.

FREEHOLD GROUND-RENTS.—To be SOLD, by PRIVATE CONTRACT, to pay 4l. per Cent., valuable FREEHOLD GROUND-RENTS, amounting to 815l. per annum, secured on noble first-class mansions, Nos. 3, 13, 27, and 41, in Victoria-street, Westminster, most substantially built, and producing gross rentals of about 5600l. per annum. The ground-rents are paid with the greatest regularity by one of the principal London Joint-stock Banks. The present opportunity offers to trustees, capitalists, and others, investments of the highest class.

For particulars apply to Messrs. Tucker & New, Solicitors, 25, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.

BUILDING LAND, KENSINGTON GORE.—To be SOLD or LET, PLOTS of very valuable BUILDING LAND in the immediate vicinity of the projected Horticultural Gardens, Kensington Gore, and surrounded by first-class mansions, of noble elevation, recently erected. The roads and sewers are made, and leases would be granted for terms of ninety-one years at moderate ground-rents. The land is most eligibly situated, and well adapted for the erection of first-class residences, and from its close proximity to the new Horticultural Gardens, Hyde Park, and Kensington Gardens, and from the general character of the adjacent property, the mansions erected will always command a ready sale, and a large and improving rental.

For particulars apply to Messrs. Tucker & New, Solicitors, 25, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future Insurers EIGHTY PER CENT. of the Profits, with Quinquennial Division, or a low Rate of Premium without participation of Profits.

The next Division of Profits will be declared in June, 1860, when all Participating Policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1859, will be allowed to share in the Profits.

At the Five Divisions of Profits made by this Company, the total Reversionary Bonuses added to the Policies have exceeded 913,000l.

At the last valuation, at Christmas, 1854, the Assurances in force amounted to upwards of 4,240,000l., the Income from the Life Branch in 1854 was more than 200,000l., and the Life Assurance Fund, after division of Profits, (independent of the Guarantee Capital), exceeded 1,540,000l.

LOCAL MILITIA and VOLUNTEER CORPS.—No extra premium is required for service therein.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their Lives at the Tabular Premiums may have their Lives insured at Extra Premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such Policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS of POLICIES.—Written Notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for Policy Stamps.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances are effected upon every description of property at moderate rates.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, MAY 26, 1860.

It is conceded that the Lords in Parliament once possessed, and still may possess, the legal and technical right of placing their absolute veto upon a money bill; but it is said by some that they have not exercised this right since the revolution of 1688; that it has therefore fallen into desuetude, is now opposed to the spirit of the constitution, and ought no longer to be exercised. It is also conceded, on the other hand, that all money bills must originate in the House of Commons*, and that they will not be received back by them from the Lords in an altered or amended form. Lord Lyndhurst, on the occasion of the recent debate in the House of Lords on the repeal of the paper duty†, gave some interesting illustrations of these constitutional doctrines. He quoted a resolution of the House of Commons in 1671, that "in all aids given to the King by the Commons the rate or tax ought not to be altered;" and in 1673, that "all aids and supplies and aids to his Majesty in Parliament are the sole gift of the Commons, and all bills for the granting of any such aids or supplies ought to begin with the Com-

* A money act is peculiar in its form, and treats the supply as the gift of the Commons alone:—"Most gracious Sovereign, we, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, towards making good the supply which we have cheerfully granted to your Majesty in this session of Parliament, have resolved to grant unto your Majesty the sum hereafter mentioned, and do therefore most humbly beseech your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by and with the advice of the Lords spiritual and temporal," &c.

mons, and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons to direct, limit, and appoint, in such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords." In 1689, which Lord Lyndhurst described as one of the best periods in our history, the Lords amended a money bill. The Commons disagreed, and desired a conference, and in their reasons given for desiring it is the following important statement:—"All money aids and taxes to be raised or charged upon the subjects in Parliament are the gift and grant of the Commons in Parliament, and are, and always have been, and ought to be, by the constitution and ancient course and laws of Parliament, and by the ancient and undoubted rights of the Commons of England, the sole and entire gift, grant, and present of the Commons in Parliament, and to be laid, rated, raised, and paid for the public service and use of the Government as the Commons shall direct, limit, and appoint, and modify the same. And the Lords are not to alter such gift, grant, limitation, appointment, or modification of the Commons in any part or circumstance, or otherwise to interpose in such bills than to pass or reject the same for the whole, without any alteration or amendment, though in ease of the subjects. As the Kings and Queens, by the laws and constitution of Parliament, are to take all or to leave all in such gifts, grants, and presents from the Commons, and cannot take part and leave part, so are the Lords to pass all or reject all, without diminution or alteration." The noble and learned Lord then adverted to the question of usage, and, with reference to his own observations upon the Life Peerage Bill, said, "It was stated that 400 years ago the Government had created a life peerage, but no instance had occurred since that time. The argument

I made use of was, that everything in this country depends on long usage and prescription; when, therefore, no such right has been exercised for 400 years, and no claim has been put forward during that period, it ought not to be acted on, and cannot be considered as part of the law and constitution of the country, particularly after the many changes, including a revolution and a restoration, which have taken place." Lord Lyndhurst, however, asserts that money bills have been rejected by the Lords on several occasions within a recent period. Among the more modern instances, he cited one of 1809, when a bill from the Commons for continuing and granting certain duties on malt was rejected; one of 1789, when a bill for imposing duties on cocoa-nuts was rejected; and a similar instance occurred in 1790. And not only bills for imposing, but for granting relief from taxation, were shewn to have been thus rejected. In 1790, a bill to relieve the coasting trade of Great Britain, by removing stamps on certain documents, and abolishing stamps respecting the Isle of Man; in 1805, a bill for abolishing certain fees payable to custom-house officers in England; in 1807, a like measure with regard to Ireland; in 1808, a bill for repealing duties on coals carried coastwise in Wales; and in 1811, a bill to suspend for one year the duties on corn, and to permit the distillation of spirits from molasses, were rejected by the House of Lords.

We cannot better state the objections which are urged to these precedents, and to several of a like character quoted by Lord Montague, and their applicability to the question before the House, than by extracting a portion of Lord Cranworth's speech in answer to Lord Lyndhurst. His Lordship observed—"I venture to say, with as much confidence as one can speak of a negative proposition, that this is a course that has never been before taken by the House. . . . The course your Lordships are now asked to take is, if not absolutely unconstitutional, at least so thinly separated that to ordinary minds the difference is unintelligible. What did my noble and learned friend say? He said that we had the power to do that which we were now asked to do—that an existing tax could not be repealed without an act of Parliament, and that such act could not pass without your Lordships' concurrence. But that is a truism which never has been disputed. My noble and learned friend quoted examples in the year 1689, but he did not at all advance his argument thereby. No doubt this House cannot alter a money bill without the consent of the House of Commons. All you can do is to reject a bill, whether it be for relief or burthen. But I say, up to this hour, no such step has been taken by this House as to refuse to concur in the repeal of a tax under circumstances such as now exist. I will deal with the meagre precedents quoted by my noble and learned friend presently. What is it we are asked to do now? The Crown has communicated to the House of Commons what are the wants of the State. Those wants have been discussed, modified, and approved, and, in the exercise of their constitutional functions, they have found ways and means for those wants, and have come to the conclusion that this particular tax is not necessary for the wants of the State. I say that a bill founded upon such considerations being brought here, there never has been since the Revolution an instance of this House rejecting such a bill. My noble and learned friend said he had several precedents, and until he stated them I was under the belief that my search, although laborious, had been imperfect; but when he told us what those precedents were, I found that I was justified in my opinion that there were no precedents to justify such a course as we are now asked to take. The first instance given was in 1790, when this House rejected a bill to relieve the coasting trade by removing stamps from certain documents. I do not mean to say that there are not instances where, upon collateral grounds, the repeal of some tax has been thought undesirable, and the Lords have exercised their right of refusing their assent to the repeal. But in this case there is a most important distinction, which your Lordships must not think is the quibble of a lawyer. My noble and learned friend, in referring to the precedent on which he relied, omitted—no doubt inadvertently—one little word, which made all the difference in the world. He described the act as one to relieve the coasting trade by removing certain stamp duties. But the act had several objects. It was to relieve the coasting trade, to remove stamp duties, and to abolish bonds. Now, it is matter of A B C, that if anything is tacked to a money bill, this House has a right to reject the whole. The instance cited by my noble and learned friend is open also to another observation. This House was moved to go into committee on the bill on Tuesday, the 8th June. They determined not to do so, and the prorogation came the next day but one. Now, the Lords might very well think that was not the way to treat them. The measure probably came before them at a time when there were not many in attendance; and this of itself would furnish sufficient grounds for rejecting it. Well, then, the two next cases quoted by my noble and learned friend seemed to me not to touch the question. In two consecutive years, it appears, the House of Commons passed bills to abolish the fees payable to certain custom-house officers. This House rejected them. Did those bills affect the annual revenue of the country? Technically it may be that the Lords on those occasions refused to repeal a tax, but in substance they did not; and in these matters it is the substance, and not a mere technical analogy, to which we should look. The only precedent which seemed to possess any weight was that of 1811—I mean the bill respecting molasses. But even that precedent was a good deal strained. In 1811 the price of wheat was enormous, averaging, I think, from 11s. to 12s.; and of course barley was dear in proportion. For the purpose of relieving the pressure occasioned by these high prices, the House of Commons introduced a bill to reduce the duty on molasses, in order that a distillation might go on mainly from sugar, and not from corn. That bill came up here on the 6th May. Now, the important point in the case is, that the financial statement of the Government that year was not made till the 20th May. No doubt, therefore, the Government wanted to know, before introducing the budget, whether the bill would be approved by the great landowners of this House; and in the debate the Earl of Suffolk, who led the opposition to the bill, gave a clue to the whole case when he said he was happy to find that the motion was not to be made a party question. The Government were, no doubt, sounding both Houses, to see whether they would or would not adopt this measure as part of their financial scheme. The House, very likely thinking it was a covert way of interfering with the agriculturists for the benefit of the West Indian interest, refused to pass the bill, and a budget was afterwards framed in accordance with that refusal. The case differed entirely from the one now before us, and the course of the Government was open to objection upon totally different grounds. It furnishes no precedent for the course which you are now asked to pursue. Here the budget has been introduced and has been confirmed, one of its provisions being the repeal of a certain tax which is declared to be not wanted for the public service; and you are asked to say, 'Though the tax is not wanted, it shall still be levied.' These were the precedents of my noble and learned friend. My noble friend (Lord Montague) alluded to two others, one of which occurred a century ago. From the nature of the tax, it was evidently one which this House rejected, not upon any financial grounds; but because it was an interference with one interest in favour of another. In 1758 there seem to have been bills to allow the importation of cattle from Ireland, and there was also the tallow bill. These were two measures having relation to Irish and English produce, and, for some reason or other, this House thought they ought not to pass. In any case they would only furnish a technical, and not a substantial, precedent. Then, again, in 1816 this House rejected a bill for taking off the duty on stone bottles. At that time the duty on stone bottles was a complicated one; there was one duty on bottles introduced from Ireland, and another on bottles manufactured in England, the general duty being one of 2s. 6d. per cwt. All we know is, that a bill for repealing the duty passed the House of Commons, and that, five days before the prorogation, this entry occurs in the journals:—"Present so and so—Order of the day for going into the stone bottle bill put off for six months." The Government appear to have been misled into proposing something which ought not to have been proposed. In the next session they introduced a bill, not for taking off the duty, but for doubling it; and the duty accordingly became 5s. instead of 2s. 6d. These precedents are equally invalid as regards the substance of the present bill. . . . I cannot conclude without expressing a hope that your Lordships will not, on this occasion, take a step sanctioned by no substantial precedent since the Revolution. I do think, that by attempting to make such a precedent in the case of a tax which has been more than once disapproved on principle by the other House of Parliament, and which affects a most influential class of the community, you will be taking a step which will very materially endanger the high position which I am persuaded you hold in the estimation of the country, and which you will continue to hold so long as the country sees that you neither actually interfere with the constitutional rights of the other House, nor do that which is not to be distinguished from such an interference—namely, refrain from imposing, but refuse to repeal, a tax."

SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE SICILIANS.

In the recent debate on this subject in the House of Commons (May 18) a case was referred to as having been decided in 1824 by Best, C. J., and as having a material bearing upon the question. The case is that of De Wijs v. Headricks, (2 Bing. 314). The plaintiff there had proposed to raise a loan for the Greeks in arms against the government of the Porte. For this purpose he had lodged with the defendant an instrument, which was alleged to be a power of attorney, signed abroad by the Exarch of Ravenna, but which turned out to have been fabricated in London. The plaintiff sued in trover for this paper, and a verdict having been found against him, upon the ground that the whole transaction was a fraud on his part, the Court refused a new trial, Best, C. J., saying—"It occurred to me at the trial that it was contrary to the law of nations (which, in all cases of international law, is adopted into the municipal code of every civilised country) for persons in England to enter into engagements to raise money to support the subjects of a government in amity with our own, in hostilities against their government, and that no right of action could arise out of such a transaction. . . . In consequence of what I said, a note has since been sent me of a case that occurred lately in Chancery, in which the Lord Chancellor is reported to have said: that English courts of justice will afford no assistance to persons who set about to raise loans for subjects of the King of Spain, to enable them to prosecute a war against that sovereign. Had I been aware that my opinion was supported by such high authority (although the counsel for the defendant would not take the objection) I should have nonsuited the plaintiff. On further consideration, I think that my opinion at the trial was right, and on that ground we ought not to grant a new trial."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 2, 1860.

OUR common law, which grew up in times when juries possessed none of the intelligence they do now, whether from literature, or from observation of mankind, and the continual mixing with their fellow-citizens, found it necessary, by rules of its own, to protect them from being imposed upon by the cunning and falsehood of more designing and artful men; and thus witnesses were rendered incompetent to give any testimony in certain cases, because the tribunal before which they came knew not how to attach the proper weight to the testimony they could and ought to have been permitted to give. The character of juries is now changed from what it was when the rules of incompetency became established, and those reproaches upon judges, juries, and counsel have now gradually, but with great success in the working, been almost swept away. Now it is permitted to leave the circumstance that formerly created the incompetency, and shut out the testimony, to act as a weight in the scale which juries hold, light or heavy, as the case may demand. And surely, if the great object to which all rules of evidence ought to be directed be the discovery of truth, and if, in proportion as the means of inquiry and information are shut out, the discovery and enforcement of truth becomes more difficult, it ought to require powerful reasons to support the exclusion of any piece of testimony calculated to throw light on the subject-matter of the inquiry. And such is the opinion that has of late, but not till of late, gained a firm footing amongst lawyers; yet it is but by small and slow steps that they have been found willing to thrust aside the rules relating to incompetency of witnesses. Even now they cling with tenacity to one of the last remnants of the old error; for whilst in civil matters a man's own or his wife's testimony for or against himself or her is weighed with care and attention, yet they say we must not, in a criminal matter, where a man is charged with an indictable offence, or one punishable with summary conviction, hear him or her; so far rather we must grope about in the dark.

It was a proposition of Mr. Bentham's, that "in the character of objections to competency no objections ought to be allowed." (1 Rat. Jud. Ev. 3). And that principle has been acted upon, and to a great extent, and with complete success, carried out by Lord Denman, Lord Brougham, and the County Court Acts; but there remains the relic of the common law that we have mentioned above. The first thing that strikes a reflective person is the quaint limitation of the rule to the two cases mentioned; and this serves to point out how it has outlived its day, and how much out of harmony it is with the present spirit of the law. But why should not a man accused, under the circumstances in the rule, be allowed to afford his own testimony on oath, and exculpate himself, if his evidence appears to be trustworthy? Because, it is said, his interest in the result is so strong that he will not scruple to commit perjury to get himself acquitted. But if it is true that human nature cannot, in all instances, withstand such temptation, and cannot be relied on under such circumstances, the jury will do well to watch narrowly such evidence, and give it its proper weight; whilst it must necessarily render the course of justice less satisfactory, if, when the mouths of persons innocent, and who may be above such temptation, are completely closed, all that a preconceived theory for the prosecution, and the bias of the accuser's mind, can throw down against him, is fully listened to. If the account of the accused is trustworthy, the jury have a satisfaction in acquitting him that they do not now feel; and if not trustworthy, the ends of justice and the public welfare are the better attained, for then the whole case is fairly before the jury, while now but one side is. So that, so far as the interests of the public are concerned, there appears to be no fear of the result. But then, looking at the question as it affects the prisoner, it is said such a temptation ought not to be held out to perjury. But the same persons who object this approve of the changes which have already taken place on the subject of incompetency, and admit, that if a person's whole property is at stake, he may give evidence for himself, though he is a defendant. Does the loss of liberty, and that of all a man possesses of property, make so great a difference that a man may be trusted on oath in the latter instance, though not in the former? Yet a verdict against him in the latter may equally lead to loss of liberty. A defendant in a quit tam action for a penalty, though of a penal nature, and involving loss of character and property, may with safety be heard; and yet the same man's oath is not to be received if the offence he had committed were indictable, or punishable by summary conviction. And, indeed, such appears to be the state of the law, that a defendant in any suit or proceeding under any act relating to the customs has his mouth closed, but if it happen to be a proceeding against him for infringing the excise laws he may be heard. It is evident that there can be nothing sound in that objection. But then it is said it would be inquisitorial—it is repugnant to our law to make or offer facilities to a man to criminate himself. Now, in the first place, the supposition is not that he will criminate, but that he may exculpate, himself. In the next place, it is not advocated that he should be compelled to suffer an examination, but only that it may be competent for him to tender himself as evidence. To which it is replied, the mere refusal to tender himself will bear so hardly against him, that it would of itself almost convict him. But if it did bear so hardly against him, it would do so but as a piece of evidence—an element in the case which would have the greater or less weight, according to the circumstances. The rules, too, of evidence were not made to screen the accused, but to ascertain the truth of the matter. The deliberate conduct of an accused person, viewed as a matter of fact, is one that should weigh considerably with a person inquiring into the charge; and even has been held to be of such force as to amount to an irrebuttable presumption of law. (Co. Litt. 373. b.) So that, on the whole, it seems to us that no injury would be done to an innocent man, but an additional facility would be given him of clearing up an accusation made rashly, and to be repelled only by the explanation that he or his wife might be able to depose on oath to. And this brings us to another branch of this rule of exclusion, which precludes husbands and wives from giving testimony for or against each other in any criminal proceeding. The reasons for this rule are given in Hawk. P. C., book 2, c. 46, s. 67—"It seems agreed that husband and wife, being as one and the same person in affection and interest, can no more give evidence for one another, in any case whatsoever, than for themselves, and that regularly the one shall not be admitted to give evidence against the other, nor the examination of the one made use of against the other, by reason of the implacable dissension which might be caused by it, and the great danger of perjury from taking the oaths of persons under so great a bias, and the extreme hardship of the case."

Mr. Phillips, in the first volume of his work on Evidence, (p. 67, 10th ed.), adopts two of the reasons, and glances at the third; he says—"It is founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly on a principle of public policy, which deems it necessary to guard the security and confidence of private life, even at the risk of an occasional failure of justice. They cannot be witnesses for each other, because their interests are absolutely the same; they are not witnesses against each other, because this is inconsistent with the relation of marriage, and the admission of such evidence would lead to disunion and unhappiness, and possibly to perjury." With regard to interest, the result in such a case would not affect her worldly interest, probably, nearer than the loss of all a man's property would affect his: her affection might not be greater than that of a daughter or a son, sister or brother, the evidence of all of whom is admissible.

Then, again, this rule is limited to lawful marriages, or to such as are innocent in the eye of our law; and it has been determined that a kept mistress was a competent witness for her protector, though she passed by his name, and appeared to the world as his wife, (Batthews v. Galindo, 4 Bing. 610); yet it cannot be denied that the interest and affection in that case might well be as strong as in the case of what the law deems a lawful marriage. It has, too, in nearly every case but this, been admitted by the Legislature that interest is no longer a ground of incompetency. But another reason is the disunion and unhappiness it would create in the marriage state, and public policy requires such to be carefully guarded. Now, in Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, in support of the proposition laid down in sect. 67, he states in sect. 69, "So, where a settlement was claimed by a person as the wife of J. W., and after proof of a marriage in fact, the wife of J. W. was called to prove a previous marriage to her, the wife was rejected as an incompetent witness, because her evidence went to criminate her husband. (Res v. Chirgin, 2 T. R. 263)." In sect. 70 it is said, "So, if a husband be charged with having concealed his effects as a bankrupt, contrary to the 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, his wife cannot be examined as to anything that may tend to criminate him." In sect. 71 it is stated, "So, also, it seems that in questions between other parties the evidence of a wife shall not be admitted if it directly tend to charge or criminate her husband, but she may give evidence touching his estate. (Hill v. Hill, 2 Str. 1092)." These cases no doubt proceed on the ground that the peace of families is to be upheld, even to the protection of a criminal; but this position is destroyed by the fact that those cases are overruled. Thus, in a question respecting a female pauper's settlement, where a man testified that he was married to the pauper, another woman was admitted to prove her own previous marriage with the same man. (Res v. Bathwick, 2 B. & Ad. 639; Res v. All Saints, Worcester, 6 Mau. & S. 194). So, in an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the wife of the drawer, on the trial, proved that he had forged the bill; and the Court above did not disapprove of the reception of the evidence, but supported the verdict on other grounds.

And again, by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 118, the wife of a bankrupt may be compelled to discover the estate and effects of her husband. Either, then, the peace of families, it is supposed, is not disturbed in the cases last put—and if that be true, we should be inclined to dispute the proposition that it would be so in the one we are now discussing—or the preservation of the peace of families is not the ground of the rule of incompetency in such cases. As to any bias that may be in the wife's mind, that is a subject that is now generally admitted to be grappled with by the jury, counsel, and judge.

No doubt justice is generally done under the present system, but a case sometimes occurs which clearly demonstrates, that at all events it would be more satisfactory for the tribunal that dispenses it to have the benefit of the testimony which is now excluded by the rules we have been discussing.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The question, whether it is of any use to attempt to diminish the length of deeds and wills by any direct legislation, is one on which a difference of opinion may well be entertained; still, as the attempt is occasionally made, it is not unimportant to inquire what is the best method of doing so; and by way of contribution to such an inquiry, I beg the favour of a little space for a comment on your article (ante, p. 187) on Lord Cranworth's "Bill to give to Trustees, Mortgagees, and others certain Powers now commonly inserted in Settlements, Mortgages, and Wills."

I would submit that you have not done justice to this bill in saying that it is "founded on the same principle" as Lord Brougham's Short Forms Acts of 1845, (8 & 9 Vict. cc. 119, 124). The principle of those acts is to provide that certain specified short sentences shall be deemed to mean certain specified long sentences; the principle of Lord Cranworth's bill is to dispense with the necessity of inserting certain sentences at all, by altering the general law affecting the subject-matter of such sentences.

Let me illustrate the different methods by an example:—Suppose the object to be to get rid of the necessity of inserting in every settlement the usual power to appoint new trustees on the death or retirement of the original ones. Lord Brougham's method would be to enact that some symbolic form, say the word "Abracadabra," in a settlement, should mean, "Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared, that in case the said A. B. and C. D. should die," and so forth, inserting in his act the whole of the common form as found in the precedent books. Lord Cranworth's method (as illustrated in the 28th section of his bill) would be to provide (with the requisite details) that whenever any trustee dies or retires a successor may be appointed. There is a third possible method, of which Lord St. Leonards has given us a specimen in the 31st section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35—to enact that every settlement shall be deemed to contain a clause in these words, "Provided always," &c., giving (like Lord Brougham) the words of the common form.

Now, it appears to me, that of these three methods Lord Cranworth's is clearly the most correct. The objections to Lord Brougham's are very serious. I need not make any addition to what you have said on the subject, for I do not think his acts have had a good word from anybody; and Lord St. Leonards' method is, at best, a clumsy one. But I confess I cannot see what objection in principle can be raised to putting the general law in such a state as to dispense with the necessity of inserting a variation of it by special stipulation in every deed and will that is drawn. You observe, that "it would be a great inconvenience to trustees to be compelled to have resort to an act of Parliament, not always accessible, to inform them what are their powers and duties, instead of finding them clearly defined within the four corners of the instrument under which they act;" but surely no legal system can be framed, or even conceived, which does not go on the assumption that the law is known to those who are affected by it; and the best state of the law of property, on a general view of the subject, must be that which requires the fewest supplemental arrangements between individuals in carrying on the common affairs of life. Besides, the whole of the powers and duties of trustees never are, and cannot be, inserted in wills and settlements; they must know the general law as it is; their own little code cannot be all.

The power of executors to sell the personal estate of their testators, and give a valid receipt for the purchase money, now belongs to them by the general law; would it be thought an improvement that that law should be abrogated, and that special powers to the same effect should be inserted in every will? Yet if your observations are just, that would be an improvement, inasmuch as it would place more of the powers and duties of the executors "within the four corners of the instrument," and remove them from the general law, "not always accessible."

Recurring to my illustration of Lord Brougham's method, let me observe that it is strictly fair, and even favourable. His short forms, by hypothesis, do not mean the same thing as the long forms; for if they did, his acts would be unnecessary; and if a symbol is to be used, the concisest is the best; and one which has no intrinsic meaning is far preferable to one which has a meaning of its own, besides that conventionally assigned to it.

7. Persons importing counterfeit coin from beyond the seas shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and be liable to the same punishment.

8. Persons exporting counterfeit coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

9. Persons uttering counterfeit gold or silver coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

10. Persons uttering, accompanied by possession of other counterfeit coin, or followed by a second uttering, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

11. Persons having three or more pieces of counterfeit gold or silver coin in possession, &c., with intent, &c., shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

12. Every second offence of uttering &c., after a previous conviction, shall be felony, and the offender shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

13. Persons uttering foreign coins, medals, &c. as current coin, with intent to defraud, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

14. Persons counterfeiting &c. copper coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years, and not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

15. Persons uttering base copper coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

16. Persons defacing the coin by stamping words thereon shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour.

17. No tender of such coin to be a legal tender, and persons tendering liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s.; no person to proceed for such penalty without the consent, in England or Ireland, of the Attorney-General, or in Scotland of the Lord Advocate.

18. Persons counterfeiting foreign gold and silver coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years, and not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

19. Persons bringing such counterfeit coin into the United Kingdom shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to the same punishment.

20. Persons tendering such coin knowing the same to be false shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

21. And for a second offence shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement; and for a third offence shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

22. Persons counterfeiting foreign coin other than gold and silver coin shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a criminal offence, and liable for the first offence to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, and for the second offence to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years, and not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

23. Penalty of 40s. or imprisonment on persons having more than five pieces of such counterfeit foreign coin in their possession.

24. Persons making, mending, or having possession of any coining tools shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

25. Persons conveying tools or monies out of the Mint without authority shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to the same punishment.

26. Coin suspected to be diminished or counterfeit may be cut by any person to whom it is tendered, and the person tendering the same shall bear the loss thereof; but if the same shall be of due weight, and shall appear to be lawful coin, the person cutting the same is required to receive the same at the rate it was coined for; disputes to be determined in a summary manner by a justice of the peace.

27. Provision for the discovery and seizure of counterfeit coin and coining tools, for securing them as evidence, and for ultimately disposing of them.

28. This is a provision as to where venue is to be laid where uttering base coin occurs in two counties.

29. Upon the trial of a person charged with any offence against this act, it shall not be necessary to prove the same to be false and counterfeit by the evidence of any moneyer, or other officer of her Majesty's Mint, but it shall be sufficient to prove the same to be false or counterfeit by the evidence of any other credible witness.

30. The offence of counterfeiting coin shall be deemed to be complete, although the coin shall not be finished or perfected.

31. Any person may apprehend any person committing any indictable offence against this act.

32. No conviction for any offence punishable on summary conviction under this act shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari; and no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party had been convicted, and there be a valid conviction to sustain the same.

33. All actions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act shall in England or Ireland be tried in the county where the fact was committed, and in England, Ireland, or Scotland be commenced within six months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant or defender one month at least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action brought in England the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon, and in Scotland the defender may insist on all relevant defences; and no plaintiff or pursuer shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant or defender; and if, in England or Ireland, a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if, upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, or if, in Scotland, the verdict shall be for the defender, or if the pursuer shall abandon the action, or the court shall dismiss it as irrelevant or improperly laid, in every such case the defendant or defender shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant or defender has by law in other cases; and though a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff or pursuer in any such action, such plaintiff or pursuer shall not have costs against the defendant or defender unless the judge before whom the trial shall be shall certify his approbation of the action.

34. All offences against this act which may be committed in Scotland shall be tried according to the procedure of the criminal law of Scotland.

35. In the case of felony under the act every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this act shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

36. Offences committed at sea, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland, shall be liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended, and in any indictment the venue in the margin shall be the same as if such offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence itself shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas."

37. It shall be sufficient in any indictment for a second offence to state the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence; and a certificate of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence, signed by the clerk of the court or other officer, shall be sufficient evidence of the previous conviction, and for every such certificate a fee of 6s. 8d. shall be paid.

38. When a person is convicted of an indictable misdemeanour, the court may, in addition to or in lieu of the punishments by this act authorised, fine the offender, and require him to find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, and in cases of felony, require the offender to find sureties for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this act authorised.

39. Whenever imprisonment, with or without hard labour, may be awarded for any indictable offence under this act, the court may sentence the offender to be imprisoned, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction.

40. Whenever solitary confinement may be awarded for any offence under this act, the court may direct the offender to be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of his imprisonment, or of his imprisonment with hard labour, not exceeding one month at any one time, and not exceeding three months in any one year.

41. Summary proceedings in England may be under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and in Ireland under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, except in London and the metropolitan police district.

42. In all prosecutions in England, conducted by the Solicitors of the Treasury, the court shall allow the expenses of the prosecution; and in all prosecutions in England which shall not be so conducted, the court, upon conviction, but not otherwise, shall allow the expenses of the prosecution.

43. Act to commence on the 1st January, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 9, 1860.

A CORRESPONDENT in our last week's number thinks that we have not done justice to Lord Cranworth's "Bill to give to Trustees, Mortgagees, and others, certain Powers now commonly inserted in Settlements, Mortgages, and Wills," inasmuch as we have said that it is founded on the same principle as Lord Brougham's Short Forms Acts of 1845, (8 & 9 Vict. cc. 119, 124). Our correspondent observes, that "the principle of those acts is to provide that certain specified short sentences shall be deemed to mean certain specified long sentences;" whereas "the principle of Lord Cranworth's bill is to dispense with the necessity of inserting certain sentences at all, by altering the general law affecting the subject-matter of such sentences."

Our learned correspondent agrees with us in considering Lord Brougham's bills as open to serious objections; he characterises them as enacting that some symbolic form, such as the cabalistic term "Abracadabra," shall mean the same as some particular legal form. He does not approve of Lord St. Leonards' mode of enacting that a settlement shall be deemed to contain certain legal forms, but he considers the method of Lord Cranworth as being "clearly the most correct," inasmuch as he cannot see "what objection in principle can be raised to putting the general law in such a state as to dispense with the necessity of inserting a variation of it by special stipulation in every deed and will that is drawn."

Now, does our learned correspondent give a correct description of the principle of Lord Cranworth's bill, or at any rate of the whole of it? We think not.

It is true that the preamble of the bill recites, that "it is expedient that certain powers and provisions, which it is now usual to insert in settlements, mortgages, wills, and other instruments, should be made incident to the estates of the persons interested, so as to dispense with the necessity of inserting the same in terms in every such instrument."

This preamble, however, is not strictly accurate if applied to every part of the bill, and we presume that reliance upon it must have misled our correspondent.

Turn to the 1st section of the bill, which enacts, that "in all cases where, by any will, deed, or other instrument of settlement, it is expressly declared, or manifestly intended, that the trustees, or other persons therein named or indicated, shall have a power of sale, either generally, or in any particular event, over any hereditaments," then they may sell as is therein mentioned, shall have powers of exchange, powers to enfranchise copyholds, powers to grant licenses to copyhold or customary tenants to build or improve, make roads, &c., to pull down buildings, and, for the purpose of building or improvement, to grant leases for ninety-nine years in possession.

Now, here, Lord Cranworth most undoubtedly has resort to the principle of Lord Brougham's bills. Lord Cranworth's "Abracadabra" is the express declaration, or manifest intention, that a person shall have a power of sale, by which a person is to have power to do many other things besides effect a sale.

This is open to the objection so forcibly put by our correspondent to Lord Brougham's bills, and of every short form contained in them—"of having a meaning of its own, besides that conventionally assigned to it."

On a closer examination, moreover, of the first part of the bill, it appears to be open to serious objections. In the first place, great doubts, and consequently litigation, would arise in determining when it "is mani*festly intended*" that a person should have a power of sale. This will be clear to any one who has considered the large number of cases which have been decided upon the question as to when it was the manifest intention of a testator to exonerate his general personal estate from its primary liability to the payment of debts. And assuming for the present that all persons who give a power to trustees to sell an estate should also wish that they should have the additional powers conferred by Lord Cranworth's bill, (perhaps upon the principle of the maxim, "omne majus continet in se minus"), still it by no means follows, because a person may devise an estate, with a power to sell "in a particular event," that he wishes the donees of the power should have power, whether that event took place or not, to exchange, enfranchise, and grant licenses such as we have mentioned, and leases for ninety-nine years. We believe that in many cases the intentions of testators might be entirely defeated by the first part of Lord Cranworth's bill.

Suppose, for instance, a person devised an estate to his son (an infant) for life, and in the event of his dying without issue under twenty-one, to his daughters (also infants) as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between or amongst them, with a power of sale to the trustees in "a particular event," viz. the death of the son under twenty-one. Now, in such a case as this put, we believe, that according to Lord Cranworth's bill, the trustees, during the minority of the son, and before the power of sale had arisen, could exchange the hereditaments for others in England or Ireland, or, in the case of copyhold lands, demise the whole for ninety-nine years, although the intention of the testator may have been that his son should occupy the land. The 11th section of the bill is conceived in such confused and obscure terms as to be almost, if not quite, unintelligible, and loudly demands either amendment or obliteration.

The second part of the bill comes within the principle claimed by our correspondent for the whole, viz. sects. 12 to 25 inclusive, which render powers of sale, to insure and keep insured, and to appoint or obtain the appointment of a receiver, incidental to mortgages, on non-payment by the mortgagor of principal, interest, or premiums of insurance, at certain periods.

This, doubtless, is the best part of the bill; it is open, however, to the objection, that persons not aware of the passing of the act (and who, except by a fiction of law, can be presumed to be acquainted with the still undigested and still increasing Statute-book) may find that they have allowed the mortgagee to have powers which they never intended he should possess.

With regard to the third part of the bill, the 26th section, giving trustees certain powers of investment, is of no great consequence. By the 28th section, trustees of property held in trust for an infant, either absolutely, or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event previously to his attaining that age, are to have power, at their sole discretion, to apply the income for his maintenance, and to accumulate the residue, &c. Whether it is advisable that trustees should have such power given to them by the Legislature, to be exercised at the expense of the infant's property, independently of the fact that another person has both the means, and is bound by law to maintain him, may, we think, very fairly be doubted.

The provisions for the appointment of new trustees in certain cases may, perhaps, in some cases, supply an untoward omission, (sects. 28, 29); and we think that the power of trustees to give receipts, (sect. 30), and to executors to accept compositions, to compromise, submit matters to arbitration, &c., (sect. 31), may in some cases be useful. We think, however, that great difficulties would arise from the 33rd section of the bill.

We believe, however, in most cases, as we have said on a former occasion, (except, perhaps, in mortgage deeds affecting small properties), the powers and incidents given or created by the bill will, if it becomes the law of the land, be negated by express declaration.

In the absence of such declaration, if in any instrument the ordinary number of powers are inserted, many difficulties of construction will arise from the latter part of the 33rd section, which enacts, "that where there is no such express declaration, then, if any variations or limitations of any of the powers or incidents thereby conferred or annexed were contained in a deed, will, or instrument, such powers should be exercisable, or should take effect, only subject to such variations or limitations."

We still retain, notwithstanding the ingenious arguments of our correspondent, the opinion which we expressed in a former number, that, if the whole bill is carried, much more evil is likely to result from it than good, and that the small saving which may be effected in some few cases will be more than counterbalanced by expensive litigation occasioned in others.

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.

The following is the Report of the Special Committee on Scientific Evidence in Courts of Law:—

The committee appointed to consider the best mode of taking scientific evidence in courts of law, after having given their attention to the subject generally, and to the different schemes that have been proposed for remedying the evils now complained of, have to report as follows:—

What has been called "scientific evidence" is only a branch of that great division of evidence admissible in certain cases by our law, which consists of the opinions of witnesses on matters to which their attention has been specially devoted. To this head belongs the evidence of surveyors with regard to the condition of a house, and of veterinary surgeons, or other skilled persons, touching the soundness or unsoundness of a horse, no less than that of a chemist or mechanical philosopher with respect to the operation of the most important laws of nature. To prove that two pieces of cloth are the produce of the same loom, or two samples of wine are taken from the same bin, the opinion of a clothier or wine merchant may be submitted to a jury, precisely in the same way as, to prove that death has arisen from a certain cause, the opinion of a medical man with regard to symptoms proved to have existed during life, or appearances shewn to have been presented on a post mortem examination, may be submitted to them. In all such cases the jury are the judges of the facts, and judges also of the value which is to be attached to the opinion; and no better scheme has yet been devised for enabling them to perform this latter function than the ordinary method of examination and cross-examination adopted in our common-law courts. The knowledge and experience of the witness, the freedom of his mind from bias, the consistency of his views, and a variety of other considerations of a like nature, must form the means by which the value of his opinions may be tested. To subject scientific evidence to a different treatment would, we think, be materially to interfere with the functions of juries; while the difficulty of separating such evidence from the ordinary evidence of skilled witnesses, to which we have adverted, would be considerable. It would be impossible to define strictly who are scientific witnesses; and even if this could be done with any tolerable accuracy, it would not be easy to assign a valid reason why many other classes of experts should not be put in the same position as men of science in giving evidence in courts of law.

Nor, on the other hand, do we think that the evils arising from the present system are so great as they have sometimes been represented. The instances in which the judge and jury are left in doubt on questions of scientific evidence are rare. When such doubt has not been properly solved, the difficulty has arisen rather from the nature of the subject than from the mode in which the evidence has been taken. In all experimental sciences new facts present themselves, new discoveries are made, new generalisations are obtained, and until the whole field of nature has been investigated, and all her laws unveiled, it is impossible that, when scientific questions arise before a legal tribunal, they should not occasionally be subject to those difficulties which are continually presenting themselves in the laboratory and the study. Even with regard to the partisanship of scientific witnesses, it may well be questioned whether it is not more favourable to the advancement of science and to the ends of justice than a uniform adherence to certain received opinions, and a mere repetition of certain acknowledged formulæ. As respects the treatment of scientific men in the witness-box, we have never found that any such witness, who gave his evidence in an intelligent and independent manner, had any solid ground of complaint. Scientific witnesses, as well as others, ought to bear in mind, that to question the accuracy of their opinions is not to impeach their veracity; and with the votaries of experimental science, there ought to be no great shock to the mental system when an old theory is questioned and a new hypothesis propounded.

Upon these grounds, therefore, we are not prepared to recommend any change in the existing mode of taking scientific evidence, at least until some plan had been proposed of which the advantages would be clear, and which would work harmoniously with the rest of our legal system. To none of the suggestions by scientific men which have been laid before us does this character apply. Some of them are entirely nugatory, and others are opposed to the whole spirit of our jurisprudence, or would introduce an element of confusion, of which it would be impossible to calculate the results. We say this with the utmost respect for those who have proposed them; but being called on to consider the question as one relating to the amendment of the law, we are bound to look at any proposed change with reference to public convenience, and the general principles on which the law is administered in this country. The most important of the suggestions which have been made we shall now proceed briefly to examine.

The first proposal to which we would advert is that which would require that a full statement in writing should be made by scientific witnesses in court, uncontrolled by counsel, and that on such statement the examination and cross-examination should proceed. Now, we are not aware that there is anything at present to prevent a scientific witness making a statement in writing of his opinions bearing on the matter in issue, if it appears to the counsel who calls him that it would save time, or be otherwise desirable. But to require a written statement in all cases would, we conceive, be objectionable. It would not tend to prevent partisanship, since a scientific witness is generally called because his views in the matter in dispute are known to be favourable to the party calling him, and a written statement would afford him the opportunity of more carefully fortifying his weak points, and presenting his opinions in a more guarded manner, than can always be done on an oral examination. A witness who supported a particular theory would, in general, do so much better in writing than by an oral explanation, elicited by questions which it would be impossible for him in all cases to anticipate. No small danger would arise, we apprehend, if such a mode were introduced, of the statement becoming a regular treatise in support of the peculiar theory which the witness advocated; and there would be no less danger that the language employed in a written statement, for the purpose of obtaining accuracy, would be unintelligible to an ordinary jury. Nor should it be forgotten, that the plan of requiring written statements would be inapplicable to a large portion of scientific evidence, as much of such evidence is necessarily based on facts proved orally in court, and any general statement which did not refer to such facts would be for the most part worthless.

Another proposal made is, that the Crown should appoint scientific assessors, who should, conjointly with the judge, hear the evidence, and, if need were, under his sanction examine the witnesses on scientific points, and advise the judge as to the scientific bearings of the evidence. But what the qualification of such assessors is to be, how many are to be attached to each court, what departments of science are to be thus represented, how the presence of these officials is to be obtained at trials in each of the seven circuits into which England is divided, and how the thing would be likely to work in practice, has not been explained. Nor, even if a duly qualified assessor could be obtained in each case where his presence was wanted, can he comprehend the position which he would occupy, either at the trial, or on an application for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against evidence. The respective functions and duties of judge, jury, counsel, and witness are well defined in our law, and tend to produce one result; but we venture to think that there is no place for the proposed functionary, who is to interfere with everything, but to settle nothing. Even with regard to the modified scheme proposed by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., at a recent meeting of the Society of Arts, the difficulties are very great. According to that scheme, assessors should be appointed, who should sit with the judge, and should be bound to give their opinion in public, as well as the reasons on which that opinion was formed, the judge, however, not to be bound by the opinion so given. It must be supposed that the assessors would be persons of competent skill; and it is difficult to understand how the judge would not be morally, if not legally, bound by their opinion, or that any verdict could be supported which went against such opinion. Nor can it be doubted, that if any difference of opinion arose between the judge and the assessors on a matter which the jury must ultimately determine, the latter would be placed in a position of considerable embarrassment. In trials before the Admiralty Court, where the judge is assisted by Masters of the Trinity House, there is no jury; and, after carefully considering the working of the system adopted in that court, we are of opinion that it is altogether inapplicable to the ordinary mode of trial by jury.

It has also been proposed, that in all trials involving scientific evidence a witness should be called by the Court, who should give his opinion independently of either of the parties, and make an impartial statement of the truth. It may be questioned, however, whether such a witness might not be liable to be biased on questions of mere opinion, where the difficulty generally arises, as much as a witness called by a party; and if the witness called by the Court had formed no opinion on the question which had arisen, it might be difficult to have full reliance on his knowledge. But the great objection to this suggestion is, that it involves a departure from one of the leading principles on which our law is administered, viz. that the evidence on which the judge and jury are to proceed must be furnished by the suitors themselves, and that it is the sole duty of the Court to hold the balance even between the contending parties. Our common law knows of no paternal authority on the part of the Court, enabling it to take the matter out of the hands of the litigants, and to do justice independently of the evidence which they have adduced or failed to adduce; and we can see no reason why trials involving scientific questions should be made exceptions to the wise and beneficial rule, which has both tended to produce a pure administration of justice, and to maintain an independent spirit among the people. Where an application is made in Chancery to the discretion of the Court, it may work beneficially that the judge, when dissatisfied with the evidence on matters of opinion brought forward on either side, should be able to call in disinterested witnesses; but in a trial at law, where the parties have put themselves on the country, the introduction of such a principle would materially interfere with the working of the system.

With regard to the suggestion that the scientific witnesses should meet before the trial, and arrange their points of agreement, so as to arrive at the exact points of disagreement or divergence, the practice would no doubt be attended with beneficial results. It is much to be desired that it should become prevalent among scientific witnesses, and be considered as a matter of course in all cases where practicable. But to enforce such a practice by law would be attended with serious difficulties. Except in the case of written documents in civil causes, a party to a suit cannot be called on to make admissions, but is entitled to put the other party to strict proof of his case; and even an unwarrantable refusal to admit documents only involves the payment of the costs which the other party is compelled to incur. What steps the law could possibly take to insure the meeting of adverse scientific witnesses, or to obtain any result from such meeting, we have altogether failed to perceive.

We have not drawn any distinction between civil and criminal trials with regard to the matter under consideration, because it is one great peculiarity of our judicial system, that the rules with regard to the admission of evidence, and the mode in which it is presented to the jury, apply equally to both. It is difficult to imagine that any scheme for ascertaining the truth on an issue of fact would be advantageous in one case which would not be so in the other; and even if anything could be said in favour of such a distinction, there can be little doubt that it would never be received without the utmost repugnance by the people of this country, and must therefore be considered as entirely out of the question. On criminal trials, if a question of great doubt arises as to a matter involving scientific evidence, the natural course seems to be that the prisoner should have the benefit of that doubt, as well as in other cases where a doubt arises. And on civil trials, under similar circumstances, it will be always in the power of the parties to refer the matter to scientific men, precisely as other matters are referred to competent arbitrators. In civil actions it might even be allowed, in analogy with the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, with regard to matters of mere account, that at any time after the issuing of the writ, where the matter in dispute was one of a purely scientific character, either of the parties might obtain an order of the court or a judge to refer it to some competent person appointed by the parties, or, if they could not agree, by a judge.

Some valuable suggestions on the subject of trials relating to the infringement of patents were made to the committee by Mr. T. Webster; but as the whole subject of the law of patents is now under the consideration of a joint committee of the British Association and the National Association, we have thought it better to defer making any remarks on this subject until the latter committee has finished its investigations.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM.—23 VICTORIA.—June 4, 1866.

This Court will, on Thursday, the 14th day of June instant, and the two following days, and on Thursday, the 21st day of June instant, and the two following days, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the country cases then pending in the New Trial Paper, and of the cases in the Special and Crown Papers.

The Court will also hold a sitting on Saturday, the 7th day of July next, for the purpose only of giving judgment in cases previously argued.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Charles Farquhar Shand, Esq., to be Chief Judge of the Supreme Court of the island of Mauritius; also Eliséé Nolin, Esq., to be Crown Solicitor for the aforesaid island.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to be Commissioners for administering oaths in the High Court of Chancery in England:—Malim Messiter, of Frome, Somersetshire, and Charles Brown, of Maidenhead, Berkshire.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

TRINITY TERM, 1860.

At a public examination of the students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on the 18th, 19th, and 21st May, 1860, the Council of Legal Education awarded to—

James Wilson, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn, a studentship of fifty guineas per annum, to continue for a period of three years.

Henry P. Pisani, Esq., student of the Inner Temple, and Daniel A. Freeman, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn, certificates of honour of the first class.

Francis Thomas Platt, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; Thomas Watson, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; Charles Walker, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; Edward Fitzhayload A'Beckett, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; James Tisdall Woodroffe, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; Arthur Brandreth, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; Albert Nevins Flintoff, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; Henry Pottinger, Esq., student of the Inner Temple; Richard Coggins Rogers, Esq., student of Gray's Inn; Edward James Athawes, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn; and John Werrett, Esq., student of Lincoln's Inn, certificates that they have satisfactorily passed a public examination.

By order of the Council,

(Signed) RICHARD BETHELL, Chairman.

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn,

May 28, 1860.

ATHEISTS WITNESSES.—The Massachusetts Senate has adopted an amendment to its laws, which removes the disability to receive the testimony of Atheists in its courts of law. The amendment provides, that "every person not a believer in any religion shall be required to testify truly, under pains and penalties of perjury." To this an amendment was adopted as follows:—"And the evidence of such persons' disbelief in the existence of God may be received to affect their credibility as witnesses." The latter clause of the amendment was adopted by a vote of ten to seven.

With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.
 "This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.
 "We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.
 "This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

LINDLEY'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Just published, in 2 vols. royal 8vo., price 2l. 8s. cloth, A TREATISE on the LAW of PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book, to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 16, 1860.

HALLAM, in his "Constitutional History," when giving an account of the dissensions between the two Houses of Parliament on the exclusive right of the Commons as to money bills, observes, "The embers of that fire may not be so wholly extinguished as never again to shew traces of its heat." The learned historian's anticipation has been realised by the Lords' rejection of the Bill for the Abolition of the Paper Duty; for the question has thereby arisen, whether the Lords possess the right to reject a bill passed by the Commons for repealing an excise duty? It will not be the fault of some of our daily contemporaries if this question of privilege does not lead to a dispute between the two Houses as violent as some of those which occurred on the questions of The Jurisdiction of the House of Lords in Appeal Cases, and The Aylesbury Election case, in the reigns of Charles II and Anne. That the subject is an important one will not be denied by any one acquainted with our constitutional history; but neither violent declamation against the House of Lords, appeals to the prejudices of the masses, nor dogmatic assertion of untenable theories, can lead to any satisfactory conclusion. It is a question of constitutional law, which can only be solved by reference to historical precedents and parliamentary law. The absurd dogmatism displayed by many of those who consider that the privileges of the Commons have been violated by the Lords might lead one to believe that the law of Parliament is indeed "a multis ignorata," as Sir E. Coke asserts, (1 Inst. 11), were not their party prejudices so conspicuous, that one is ready to adopt Lord Holt's observation—"As to what my Lord Coke says, that the 'lex Parliamenti est a multis ignorata,' that is only because they will not apply themselves to understand it." (2 Ld. Raym. 1114).

That the Commons possess the right of originating all bills imposing taxes or granting supplies is a fundamental law of Parliament. Subsidies and aids were said to be granted "per communitatem Angliæ nobis;" because, says Coke, "all grants of subsidies or aids by Parliament do begin in the House of Commons, and first granted by them." (4 Inst. 29). It appears from the parliamentary records, that, in the early period of our history, the Lords and Commons voted separate subsidies for themselves. At length, when the political importance of the Commons increased, and when their proportion of the taxes became greater than that of the Lords, so that the subsidies voted by them became the principal source of the imperial revenue, the Commons gradually assumed the privilege which they now possess in regard to taxation and supply, and not only included the Peers as well as themselves in their subsidies, but established their exclusive privilege of originating all bills for the imposition of taxes. In the parliamentary rolls of the reign of Henry IV is to be found one of the earliest precedents in which the Commons asserted this privilege. In 1407 the Lords passed a resolution for the prolongation of a tax upon wool, skins, &c., declaring that the same was in view of defence against enemies, and for the due safeguard of the realm: This resolution being reported to the Commons, and their concurrence demanded, the roll states—“Quele report ensi fait as ditz Communes, ils ent furent grandement destourbez, en disant & affermant ce estre en grant prejudice et derogation de lour libertees; et depuis qe nre. dit S<sup>r</sup>. le Roy ce avoit entenduz, nient veullant qe riens soit fait a present, n'en temps advenier, qe tourner purroit ascunement encontre la libertee de l'estate, pur quelle ils sont venuz au Parlement, n'encontre les libertees de les Seignrs. suis ditz, voet & graunte, & declare, de l'avis & assent de mesmes les Seignrs. en la manere q'entente. C'est assaver, qe bien lise les Seignrs. de comuner entre eux ensemble en cest present Parlement, & en chescun autre en temps advenier, en absence du Roy, de l'estate du Roialme, & de le remedie a ce busoignable. Et qe par semblable manere bien lise as Communes, de lour part, de comuner ensemble de l'estate et remedies suis ditz. Purveux touterfoitz qe les Seignrs. de lour part, ne les communes de la leur ne facent ascun report a nre. dit S<sup>r</sup>. le Roy d'ascun Grant p. les Communes grantez & p. les Seignrs. assentuz, ne de les communications du dit Grant, avaunt ce qe mesmes les Seignrs. & Communes soient d'un assent et d'un accord en celle partie, & adonques en manere & forme come il est accustumez, c'est assaver p. bouche de Purparlour de la dite commune pur le temps esteant.” (Rol. Parl. 3, 611; 9 Hen. 4, No. 21). It will be observed, that this ordinance not only states that the Commons deemed the proceedings of the Lords “in great prejudice and derogation of their liberties,” but in it the Commons distinctly admit that all grants of money are made by them, and assented to by the Lords, the words being, “that neither the Lords nor the Commons shall make any report to the King concerning any aid granted by the Commons, and assented to by the Lords.” It is important to notice, that the ordinance is so worded that both the Crown and the Peers seem to concur in this assertion of privilege by the Commons; and it does not appear that since that time the right of the Commons to originate money bills has ever been questioned. So jealous has the Lower House been to guard against any apparent infringement of this privilege, that in the short Parliament of April, 1640, the Lords having sent a message to the Commons requesting them to let a bill of supply have precedence over a discussion on grievances, this act was resented as a great breach of privilege, and the celebrated Pym was appointed to draw up a protest, and present the same at a conference. (Com. Jour., April 28, 1640). This right of the Commons is recognised in the peculiar form of a bill of supply, the preamble to which recites the grant as the gift of the Commons alone, but adopts the customary words, “by and with the assent of the Lords spiritual and temporal,” in the enacting words.

The Lords were not originally precluded from amending bills of supply; for on the journals of the House are numerous cases in which the Commons agreed to such amendments. It was not until after the Restoration that the Commons declared the alteration of a money bill to be a breach of their privileges. In 1661 a bill for paving the streets of Westminster was sent from the Lords down to the Commons; although this was only a local act, yet, as it imposed a charge upon the people, the Commons laid it aside, and brought in another bill, because they conceived “that it was a privilege inherent in their House that bills of that nature should be first considered there.” (Com. Jour., July 24 and 29; Lords' Jour., July 30, 1661). When the second bill was sent to the Upper House, the Lords inserted a clause, to which the Commons disagreed, for the first time denying to the Lords the right to amend a money bill. The Lords considered this assertion of the Commons to be against the inherent privileges of their House: the bill was withdrawn altogether, and from that time till 1689 the controversy between the two Houses was constantly revived as to the limits of the exclusive privilege claimed by the Commons. In 1671, an amendment having been sent from the Lords for changing the proportion of an imposition on sugar from one penny per pound to one halfpenny half farthing, the Commons resolved, that “in all aids given to the King by the Commons, the rate or tax ought not to be altered.” (Com. Jour., April 13, 1671). In 1678 the Commons placed on their Journals a resolution, “That it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords.” (Com. Jour., July 3, 1678). In 1678, the Lords, wishing to appoint certain Peers to rate the estates of all Peers to a poll-tax, amended a bill which had been sent up to them for the levying of such tax. The Commons disagreed, and desired a conference, and moreover placed upon the Journals a resolution, giving their reasons for such conference, which embodies a statement of the rights and privileges of the Commons on the subject of taxation. To this resolution reference will be made in a subsequent article on this subject. Although the Lords have never, by any resolution, acknowledged that the Commons possess any further privilege than that of originating bills of supply and taxation, yet as the Commons have invariably refused to consider any amendments made by the Lords to such bills, and the Lords now refrain from making any alterations in them, it must be taken as an established maxim of the lex et consuetudo Parliamenti, that amendments in money bills cannot be made by the Upper House; and Lord Lyndhurst admitted this in his speech on the recent debate on the repeal of the paper duty.

(To be continued).

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—I crave once more a little space for a short answer to your comments (ante, p. 215) on my letter of the previous week. I contend that I did not misdescribe the first part of Lord Cranworth's bill when I said that it differed in principle from Lord Brougham's

Acts. Lord Brougham enacts that a certain specified form of words shall be deemed to mean another specified form of words. Lord Cranworth would enact that, under certain specified circumstances, trustees shall have such and such powers; and I submit that the latter plan does differ in principle from the former, and is not open to the same objections. Into the rest of your criticism on the bill I still refrain from entering, admitting as I do that the expediency of such experiments is by no means certain, and not feeling any call to defend those points of detail where you think the execution defective. One observation, however, I would add with reference to the opinion expressed in your first article on the subject, (ante, p. 188), and repeated ante, p. 216, that even if the bill passes it will become almost a dead letter, because careful conveyancers will habitually insert in deeds a clause expressly negating its operation. I understand you to mean by this, not merely that they will do so in cases where they are satisfied that it is not desirable that the bill should apply, but that, being content with their own tried forms, they will continue to use them, and save themselves the trouble of thinking out the true operation of the bill by the simple expedient of exclusion. Perhaps conveyancers may be tempted to do so; the flesh is weak, and we none of us like to go to school again in our old or middle age; nevertheless, I must own to some regret that you did not add a word or two to express, what I am sure you must feel, that such a course is not justifiable in the practitioners of a liberal profession. We owe it to our clients, as well as to the true interests of our own calling, to test carefully every measure of this kind, and to adopt it wherever it will stand the test; and I must add, that so far as my small experience goes, your forebodings are not warranted by the mode in which some recent enactments have been received. I imagine that powers of leasing for twenty-one years are now not unfrequently omitted from settlements and wills in consequence of the 32nd section of the Settled Estates Act, and trustees' indemnity clauses in consequence of the 31st section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

TRINITY TERM, 1860.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. William Carvill Boyle, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Ansell Boyle, of London.
2. Alexander Butler Rowley, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Campbell Rowley, of Manchester.
3. Arthur Raymond Harding, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Austen & De Gex, of London.
4. Alexander Henry Clarke, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Clarke & Morice, of London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Boyle, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Rowley, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Harding, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Clarke, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names (with the exception of that of Mr. Killick, whom the Examiners think deserving of especial notice) are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Henry Fison Killick, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Wood, of Bradford, Yorkshire; and Messrs. J. W. & W. Flower, of London.

Francis James Baily, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Henry Francis Theobald Miller, of Frome; and Messrs. Combe & Wainwright, of London.

Thomas Hewitt, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Birch, of Lichfield; and Mr. George Capes, of London.

Thomas Francis Leadbitter, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Hollingsworth & Tye-man, of London.

John Hessel Priestley, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Joseph Nowell, of Barton-upon-Humber.

John Rhodes, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Arrowsmith & Allison, of Thirsk; and Messrs. Clarke & Morice, of London.

John Hugh Roberts, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Thearsby Poole, of Carnarvon; and Messrs. Bloxam, Ellison, & Bloxam, of London.

Alfred James Soden, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Frederick Barlow, of Cambridge; and Messrs. Sharpe, Jackson, & Parker, of London.

Robert Stephenson, aged twenty-four, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Marleest Barron Veal, of Grimsby.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to certificates of merit, if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Thomas Beasley, aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Rushton & Cooper, of Uttoxeter; and Messrs. Chester & Toulmin, of London.

John Bidlake, aged twenty-seven, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Cheshire Glover, of Shiffnal; and Mr. Robert Daniel Newill, of Wellington, Salop.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 86; of these 79 were passed, and 7 postponed.

By Order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

Law Society's Hall, June 7, 1860.

LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

Memorial of the Common-law Commissioners respecting the Law and Equity Bill. Addressed to the Lord Chancellor.

May 18, 1860.

MR LORD,—Our attention having been called by your Lordship to the objections urged in the memorial of the equity judges against the bill introduced into the Legislature on the recommendations contained in our last Report, with a view to our offering such answer as our acquaintance with the subject might suggest, we beg to submit the following observations in reply.

We must begin by premising that the scope and effect of the alterations proposed in the jurisdiction of the common-law courts has been greatly misconceived, while the objectors appear to have lost sight of the extent to which equitable jurisdiction has already been conferred on these courts, as well as of the great improvements which have been introduced in modern times into their procedure.

In the sweeping criticisms with which our recommendations have been assailed, the proposal to confer further equitable jurisdiction on the courts of common law has been treated as a scheme of innovation and demolition, now first propounded; and the incompetency of the common-law judges, and the inadequacy of their procedure, to deal with equitable rights, has been taken for granted, and unhesitatingly asserted, as though equitable jurisdiction had never before been conferred upon or exercised by the legal tribunals of the country.

We shall have no difficulty in shewing, that with a single, and that a very unimportant, exception, in no instance is it proposed to enlarge the equitable jurisdiction of the common-law courts, except where this jurisdiction already to some extent exists, and where the competency of these courts and of their procedure to administer it has already been established by practical experience.

It may not be inexpedient to pause for a moment to take a brief survey of what has already been done in this respect.

The rigid simplicity of the ancient common law, and its strict and inflexible procedure, having proved inadequate to meet the exigencies of a state of society becoming every day more complicated and refined, and the Legislature omitting to intervene to bring the law into harmony with the more liberal principles of rational and enlightened justice, courts of equity stepped in to supply the place of legislation, by the application of a rude yet not wholly inefficacious remedy—partly in eking out the defectiveness of the common-law procedure, partly in mitigating the rigour of the law where an adherence to its letter would have worked injustice—not, indeed, by attempting directly to control the action of the legal tribunals—an attempt which would at once have been resisted—but by coercing the suitors by means of personal duress to forego their legal rights, and to submit to have justice done between them on equitable principles.

Experience, however, soon made men sensible that the benefits of this equitable jurisdiction were greatly diminished by the drawbacks of double tribunals and a twofold litigation, attended by a vast increase of expense. Hence, from time to time, during the last century and a half, according as particular inconveniences successively forced themselves on the attention of the Legislature, portions of the jurisdiction, at first exercised only by the courts of equity, have been transferred by statute to the courts of common law.

The power to relieve against the penalty of bonds conditioned on a defeasance, to relieve up to the time of trial against actions of ejectment on forfeiture for non-payment of rent, to relieve mortgagors in actions on mortgage bonds or actions of ejectment, on payment of the principal and interest, and the important process of interpleader, are examples of this transfer of jurisdiction.

To these instances of encroachment on the domain of courts of equity must be added the transfer, in our own time, of the whole of that extensive and important jurisdiction which was known under the name of "auxiliary equity." The powers included under this head being wanting in the original procedure of the common law, courts of equity, as has already been observed, took upon themselves to make good the deficiency. Better this, no doubt, than that such powers should nowhere be found for the protection of right; yet so great the evil that a court in which a suit was pending should not have the means of doing justice between the litigants; so great the hardship of being compelled to resort to a second court to supply the defects in the procedure of the first; so serious the harassment, and, above all, the expense of the double proceeding, that the remedy was often more grievous than the absence of redress; and parties, especially of the poorer sort, more particularly where the matter in dispute was not of large amount, preferred to submit to injustice rather than have recourse to a remedy oftentimes far worse than the mischief to be cured. When, therefore, the Common-law Commissioners recommended the transfer of these powers to the courts of law, Parliament at once saw the propriety of the suggestion, and gave effect to it by legislative enactment. Yet the same argument might have been urged then which is resorted to now. The powers which it was proposed to confer on the common-law courts were powers which the courts of equity for many generations had exclusively exercised, according to principles and rules with which, so far as their practical application was concerned, the common-law judges could not be expected to be familiar; yet these powers have now been extensively exercised by the common-law courts, to the infinite advantage of the suitors. The judges have had no difficulty in familiarising themselves with the principles and rules established by the practice of equity in this department; and the machinery of the common law has proved itself abundantly adequate to the exigency of the occasion.

It may safely be asserted, that owing to the increased facility and diminished cost of the present mode of proceeding, for every instance in which resort was had to a court of equity under the old system, hundreds of instances now occur in which the corresponding powers of the common-law courts are called into action, and are found fully effective for the purpose.

The innovation introduced by the Legislature into the established jurisdiction of the different branches of our judicature did not, however, end here; and assuredly a further and a great change was imperatively called for.

The existence of two conflicting systems of law, recognising inconsistent and incompatible rights, the one called common law, the other equity, administered by two distinct sets of tribunals, each refusing to give effect to rights which would be enforced by the other, is not only an anomaly in jurisprudence, but has been found to be attended with practical inconvenience and mischief of the most serious character. That a plaintiff, who has brought his action in a court of law, the only court to which he could resort, should be liable to have his action suspended, or the fruits of the judgment he may have obtained withheld, while he is compelled to follow his opponent to a different tribunal on an allegation of equity; or, still worse, that a defendant sued in a court of law, and having a valid defence on equitable grounds, though none at law, should be under the necessity, instead of at once setting up such equitable defence as an answer to the action, to resort to another court, and there initiate a new and costly proceeding, at an expense in many instances immeasurably disproportioned to the value of the matter of the dispute, was a judicial grievance and abuse which neither time nor authority could sanction, and which, as soon as the work of legal reform was undertaken in a large and earnest spirit, neither prejudice nor interest could defend, so far as to resist some modification of the evil.

When, therefore, in our Second Report, we had gone the length of recommending that jurisdiction should be given to the courts of law to entertain considerations of equity when arising incidentally in an action at law, the Legislature, although it did not see fit to give full effect to our suggestions in respect of equitable jurisdiction, yet took the very important step of enacting that equitable defences might henceforth be pleaded in an action.

Here, again, it may be observed, that almost all the arguments which are now urged against the extension of jurisdiction at present proposed would have been equally applicable to the change then introduced. The best answer to them is, we think, to be found in the practical experience of the working of this equitable jurisdiction, which has been exercised by the common-law courts for now six years. It is from our experience of the usefulness of this jurisdiction, so far as it extends—from our persuasion that its only defectiveness arises from its not being sufficiently extensive, as well as from our conviction that, if the jurisdiction were enlarged, the courts of common law possess ample machinery for working it out, that we have been led to urge the expediency of extending the sphere of equitable defences in actions at law.

It will be convenient to divide the subject of the equitable jurisdiction proposed to be conferred by the bill into two branches—first, where the jurisdiction proposed to be enlarged or conferred arises on an action pending; secondly, where it is to be exercised independently of an action.

In the first branch equitable defences occupy the most prominent place. Equitable defences being now admissible in an action, a class of cases has arisen in which, although the defendants were desirous of pleading equitable pleas, a practical difficulty presented itself, from the equity being conditional on something to be done in futuro, or on a contingency. Such a plea a court of law could not, in the exercise of its discretion, allow to be pleaded, inasmuch as the plea, once found for the defendant, would be a bar in all time to come to the plaintiff's right, while the court would have no power to compel the performance of the condition on which the equity arose. Now, it is plain, that if this difficulty can be removed, the same reason exists for permitting an equitable plea of this nature to be made available in an action as exists where the equity is unconditional and complete.

If the condition had been performed, we have the sanction of the Legislature for saying that the equitable plea should be allowed. If the performance of the condition can be insured, there can be no conceivable reason why the defendant, who is willing to perform the condition in order to obtain the benefit of the equity which would so result to him, should be driven to a court of equity to establish his defence. Of course, this is said on the assumption that a court of common law would be able, from the competency of its judges and its officers, to insure the due and effectual performance of the condition. To doubt of this would be, as it seems to us, to doubt of their competency to administer the law at all; and we cannot bring ourselves to suppose that any serious resistance can be offered to the proposed amendment on this ground. It seems to us to follow, from what has been said, that conditional equity should be made available as a defence in an action at law, just as unconditional equity already is. Whether this should be done by an application for relief to the court in which the action is pending, (as proposed by the bill), or by allowing such an equitable defence to be pleaded, and giving the court power, if the plea should be found for the defendant, to enforce the performance of the condition, on the application of the plaintiff, may be open to consideration.

The next instance in which it is proposed to give jurisdiction in respect of equitable matter is the case of interpleader. It is of every-day occurrence, that, money or goods being in the hands of persons not claiming beneficial interest therein, or goods being seized by sheriffs in executing the process of the courts, adverse claims are set up, whereby persons thus circumstanced are placed in an embarrassing position, and are exposed to be harassed by actions, and subjected to eventual loss. It is plain that persons so circumstanced ought in justice to be relieved, on actions being brought against them, by the parties claiming the beneficial interest being put to fight out their claims. Formerly this relief could only be obtained by interpleader bill in equity—a proceeding which, as the stat. 1 & 2 Will 4, c. 58, recites, was “attended with expense and delay.”

By this statute interpleader jurisdiction was given to the courts of law. But this jurisdiction does not attach where the jus tertii set up is founded on equitable right. This jurisdiction it is now proposed to give. It cannot be contested that an innocent party, thus placed between two fires, ought equally to be relieved in the case of equitable as of legal claims. The expense and delay to the party against whom the adverse claim is set up by the institution of fresh proceedings in equity are, of course, equally great. The action is already in the court of common law, and the reasons against the double litigation apply as strongly in this as in other instances. The object ought obviously to be to place the case on such a footing that the action shall become one between the parties really interested. Now, if the action were between the real parties, as, for instance, between an execution creditor (on a seizure of goods by the sheriff) and a party setting up an adverse claim, instead of between the claimant and the sheriff, any equitable right of the claimant would be available to him against the plaintiff under an equitable plea without recourse to a court of equity. But if, in an ordinary action of trover between A. and B., any equitable rights of the defendant, as an answer to the action, would be cognisable by the court, it seems difficult to understand why, when it is sought to bring A. and B. into their proper position as litigants, at the instance of a party entitled to interpleader relief, the equitable nature of B.'s interest, which would be cognisable by the court if A. and B. were once before it as plaintiff and defendant, should be a reason for withholding from the court the power of granting such relief, and for putting the parties concerned to the vexation and expense of a fresh suit before another tribunal. In addition to which, another and a very cogent reason for extending the process of interpleader to such cases is to be found in the fact, that the setting up of adverse claims by third parties generally arises on the seizure of goods by sheriffs in execution on process from the common-law courts. To these officers, courts of equity, as was pointed out in our late Report, have refused relief by interpleader; while, on the other hand, they are liable to hostile proceedings if they omit to take possession of property according to the exigency of the writ of execution.

Next as to the proposal to extend the jurisdiction first conferred on the common-law courts by the act 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, in an action of ejectment brought on a forfeiture for non-payment of rent. By that statute the equitable power, previously exercised by courts of equity alone, of relieving the tenant on payment of the rent due, was given to the court in which the action is brought, up to the time of trial. Relief may be obtained in equity for a further period of six months after execution; but to obtain the latter relief fresh proceedings in equity must be taken. The simpler course would surely be to allow the court in which the action has been brought to afford the relief to the same extent as a court of equity can afford it. The record is in the former court; the facts are before it; the application may be by motion on affidavit; the expense of a second suit in a different court, with a fresh statement of facts, and perhaps fresh proofs, will be avoided. Nor can any possible ground be suggested, as far as we are aware, why the court, which is thought competent by the Legislature to give relief up to the time of trial, should not be equally so after trial.

In like manner, we cannot but think that the power conferred on a court of equity by the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 36, s. 4, to relieve against a forfeiture on a covenant to insure, where no loss has occurred, and the breach has been committed by accident or mistake, or otherwise without gross fraud or negligence, and a policy is in fact in existence such as the covenant requires, might advantageously be extended to courts of common law—at all events, when an action has been brought on the forfeiture. It must, we apprehend, be at once conceded that the questions involved are peculiarly within the province of a common-law court; and there seems to be no conceivable reason why a second suit should be necessary to afford the defendant protection.

We pass on to the important question, whether a party to an action, who has once had the opportunity of pleading equitable matter, and who has not availed himself of it, shall be concluded by the omission, as he would have been by the omission to plead matter available at law if his case had rested on legal grounds, so as to preclude him from afterwards resorting to a court of equity to defeat the action.

The affirmative of this proposition appears to us to follow of necessity the moment equitable matter is permitted to be introduced at all into the action at law. The argument, that a plaintiff who has necessarily commenced his suit in a court of law ought not, at the option of the other party, to be dragged before some other tribunal, applies equally, at whatsoever stage of the suit this anomaly arises. Indeed, the later the stage of the proceedings the greater and more grievous the hardship; inasmuch as, if the equitable right should eventually prevail over the legal, all the expense of the action, which may, perhaps, have involved a trial at Nisi Prius, and may have proceeded even to judgment and execution, will have been entirely thrown away; added to which, it seems repugnant to justice that a party shall be thus permitted to fight out his cause with his adversary on one stage, and, having there taken his chance of success, shall be at liberty, when defeated, to renew the conflict on a different ground, which, if rightly taken at first, would have prevented the prolongation of the original contest; while, if the equitable ground be wrongly taken at such later stage, the effect is necessarily to delay the party who has succeeded in the contest at law from reaping the benefit of the decision in his favour.

It is unnecessary to dwell on the various grounds on which the salutary rule is based, that, in judicial proceedings, litigant parties must put forward their respective cases, whether of attack or defence, at the proper stages of the suit, or be concluded by their omissions, as well as that judgment, once pronounced, in the last instance shall be final and conclusive. They may be summed up in a word—without this rule litigation would be interminable, nor could rights ever be definitively ascertained or securely established. It is obvious that this principle applies equally to the case of equitable as of legal defences; and it seems to us to follow, that if matter of equity is allowed to be pleaded in actions at law, and a court of common law is to have jurisdiction in respect of such matter at all, it should be obligatory on the party relying on equitable grounds to put them forward at the fitting time, just as it would be to bring forward matter of law; and that a party omitting to take his stand on equitable grounds, which it was competent to him to bring forward in the action, ought not to be allowed afterwards to harass his opponent by a renewal of the litigation by proceedings in a court of equity.

It is obvious that much of the foregoing reasoning applies to the bill in equity for a new trial, by which, after trial and judgment in a court of law, on the discovery of new matter, though amounting only to a defence at law, relief may be applied for in a court of equity after the expiration of the time within which a new trial could be applied for in the court in which the action has been brought. It seems to us plain that this is an inconsistency which ought to be removed. If the time limited in the court in which the action has been brought, and the trial had, is too short, that time should be extended. But it seems a startling anomaly, that when the court in which the action has been properly brought has pronounced its final judgment, a second court, not having any appellate jurisdiction over the first, may take the cause in hand, try the whole matter over again, deprive the victorious suitor of the judgment he has obtained, and decide in favour of the opposite party.

The only objection to our recommendation in this respect, so far as we are aware, has been the denial of the existence of such a process. This, however, is a mistake. The proceeding has, as was stated in our Third Report, fallen into disuse, but there is nothing to prevent its being revived. The weapon may have been laid aside, and may have grown rusty, but there is nothing to prevent its being again brought forth, and made an instrument of mischief. The forensic combatant will not have to search far or deep to find it. In two text-books of the Profession—namely, Mitford on Equity Pleading, 131, and Story on Equity, ss. 887, 888—the bill of new trial is treated of as an existing part of equity procedure, and its terms and conditions prescribed with considerable detail. The jurisdiction is treated as an existing one; nor is it suggested that, if again invoked, it must not be exercised. On reference to these authorities, it will be seen, that where a bill of review in respect of a suit in equity may be brought, the bill of new trial, upon judgment in an action at law, may be resorted to. Acting upon such authorities, we deemed it our duty to direct attention to this conflict of jurisdiction, and to suggest the expediency of cutting off the possibility of its practical recurrence.

We next proceed to consider the proposal to give to the common-law courts power to protect by injunction property, whether real or personal, the title to which is in contest in an action at law, from alienation, waste, or injury, till the right shall have been determined.

We must, in all humility, confess that we are at a loss to conceive that any substantial objection can be offered to a proposal so obviously reasonable.

It is plain that such a power should exist somewhere. A man in possession of land, the title to which is contested, a fortiori a man in possession without a title, ought not to be permitted, pending proceedings to eject him, to commit waste to the damage of one who claims with a better title. A man who is in wrongful possession of a chattel, for the loss of which money may be a very inadequate compensation to the rightful owner, ought not to be left at liberty to make away with it while an action for its recovery is pending.

At present, protection in this respect can only be obtained by recourse to a court of equity, while the recovery of the thing itself can only be effected in a court of law—two suits, with twofold expense, where one would suffice!

And no question can here be raised as to the competency of the tribunal.

It would be strange, indeed, if it could be doubted that the court, which, in an action of ejectment or detinue, has to determine the right to the corpus of the estate or chattel, was also capable of deciding whether the defendant should be restrained from committing waste, or making away with the thing in dispute, until the right was determined.

We now pass on to consider the instances in which it is proposed to confer new jurisdiction on courts of law, irrespective of any pending action.

And, first, as to the proposed power of restraining by injunction the impending violation of any legal right. We must here beg it may be borne in mind, that it is not proposed, in this branch of the subject, to confer on courts of law powers in respect of any rights which are not strictly of a legal character. Throughout the contemplated amendments, it has never been proposed, where title to property was complicated by equitable rights, to withdraw the decision from the courts of equity. This being kept in view, we must confess ourselves altogether at a loss to conceive why, when legal rights alone are involved, a court of law, whose special and proper province it is to determine such rights, should be without power to protect them from violation. And it must be observed, that this anomaly in our judicial system is rendered the more striking and discreditable to our jurisprudence by the partial jurisdiction already extended to the legal tribunals by the act of 1854.

As the law now stands, if a single act of wrong has been committed, a court of law, on an action being brought, has power to grant an injunction to prevent a repetition of the wrong. If a nuisance were about to be created which would seriously lessen the value of a man's property—as, for instance, if a local board were about wrongfully to bring the main sewer of the district close to a man's premises—no protection could be afforded by a court of law. But if the thing has once been done, and the whole expense incurred, not only may damages be recovered for the present injury, but the nuisance may be abated for all future time. If, out of a thousand trees growing on an estate, a single tree be wrongfully cut down, an injunction may be obtained from a court of law to prevent the cutting down of the remaining 999. But if, with the certainty of impending injury, the party whose rights are about to be invaded should come to a court of law for protection before the axe has been laid to the root of the first tree, he would be told, that while, if he had waited till one tree was cut, the court would have protected him as to all the rest, the Legislature has not thought fit to entrust the court with powers for the protection of the first, but has committed that to the exclusive keeping of a court of equity. We cannot but think that this state of things (arising as it does out of the partial manner in which the recommendations of our Second Report as to injunction were carried into effect) is an anomaly in our judicial system which almost borders on the ludicrous, and is a serious reproach to our legislation.

We must be forgiven for saying that we cannot comprehend the alarm which the proposal to remove it has occasioned. The jurisdiction is one which, reference being had to the subject-matter, falls properly within the province of the common-law courts. It is one in which these courts already possess and exercise in an ulterior stage. The competency of the courts or of their procedure cannot come into controversy. The question has been concluded by the Legislature itself, in conferring powers which presuppose all the qualifications, both in the judges and their procedure, which are necessary for the exercise of those now proposed to be given. We cannot but think that the objection to this extension of jurisdiction has arisen principally from its having been overlooked that it is only proposed to confer it where damages can now be recovered in an action; and where, therefore, strict legal rights are involved, and that the powers proposed to be conferred by the present bill are neither more nor less, in substance and degree, than those created by the act of 1854; the difference consisting simply in this, that they may be exercised before the mischief, instead of after it has commenced.

The only other instance in which authority is proposed to be given to a court of law, independently of a pending action, is the power to order the delivering up of documents which, on the face of them, appear to give a right of action at common law, but which, by reason of circumstances which, if an action were brought, would constitute a defence, ought not to be available, and, on the contrary, ought to be given up or cancelled.

The ground on which a party, liable to be prejudicially affected by such a document, has a claim to have it given up or cancelled, is, that the document, remaining in the hands of the opposite party, after all just claim to enforce it is gone, may one day be brought forward, after the evidence by which it would have been defeated has ceased to exist.

It is plain that power to afford relief from such a possibility, and to protect a person so circumstanced from having such a danger hanging over his head for years, ought to exist somewhere. It has hitherto been confined to courts of equity alone. The reasons for proposing to extend it to the courts of law are—first, that the documents in question would be enforceable in a court of law alone; secondly, that the matter of defence, on which the claim to have the document annulled arises, would be capable of being pleaded and tried at law if an action were brought upon it; thirdly, that the common-law procedure for trying the facts, if contested, is indisputably superior to that of a court of equity.

We have now passed in review the several cases of equitable jurisdiction proposed to be conferred by the bill. It remains for us to deal with a few general objections put forward against the measure as a whole.

The principal of these is founded on a misapprehension, which it is important to clear up. It seems to be supposed that equitable title to property is sought to be brought within the jurisdiction of the legal tribunals. This is evidently pointed at in the two cases prominently put forward in the objections of the equity judges, in which fraudulent plaintiffs with legal titles are supposed to bring ejectment in a court of law for the purpose of avoiding the discussion of adverse equitable rights before an equity court.

This is a very serious misapprehension. It overlooks the fact, that, with reference to equitable defences, the action of ejectment—the only action in which the right to real estate can be enforced—was not included in the act of 1854*; and that, with the exception of the comparatively small matter of relief from forfeiture for non-payment of rent and for omitting to insure, this action is not proposed to be touched by the present bill. So large a proportion of property in this country being held in trust, and trusts being the peculiar province of courts of equity, however serious the inconvenience arising from the occasional conflict of jurisdiction may be, it is not proposed that powers should be given to courts of law to entertain equitable considerations on a trial of title. If our last Report be referred to, it will be seen that our recommendation as to the power to grant conditional relief is confined to cases in which equitable defences are already admissible, but in which the presence of a condition prevents the court from entertaining the plea. This, of course, does not apply to ejectment, in which no equitable plea is admissible. The present bill does not include ejectment, so far as title to property is concerned. The imaginary cases put forward by the equity judges as illustrative of the mischievous operation of the enlarged equitable jurisdiction could not therefore possibly arise†.

We cannot but think that much of the opposition offered to this measure has been founded on the notion that it was sought to withdraw by it questions upon equitable title to property from the jurisdiction of a court of equity. It is desirable that this misapprehension should be dispelled as speedily as possible. No such thing has been suggested, or is contemplated by the present measure. Of course, if it should be thought that the language of the bill leaves room for the possibility of a different construction, nothing would be more easy than so to frame the enactment as to limit its operation to the extent designed.

* See Neave v. Abery, (24 L. J., C. B., 207; S. C., 16 C. B. 328).

† We may also here observe, in passing, that the third case put by the equity judges by way of objection—namely, that of an equitable mortgagor bringing detinue for deeds deposited by way of equitable mortgage, with a view to avoid a court of equity—is equally ill founded. The plaintiff would be defeated at law. The action could not be maintained under such circumstances.

Another objection insisted on by the equity judges is, that a plaintiff, having a mere legal, as opposed to an equitable right, will now have a choice of courts, and will naturally take his cause to the court in which equity is the least likely to be well administered. Assuming for a moment the inferiority of the legal courts in dealing with equitable questions, (on which a word presently, we must be forgiven for observing that this argument rests on a fallacy. A plaintiff having only a legal right to insist on has no choice of courts; he can bring his action in a court of law alone. If he went to a court of equity, he would be told that, having a remedy at law, he had no business there. The position of such a plaintiff will nowise be altered. But let us look to the other side of the case. Take the case of an honest plaintiff bringing an action on a legal claim, which he believes to be well founded. Having brought his action in the only court to which he can resort, why, because his adversary sets up an equitable defence, is he to be forced to become defendant in a new suit before a different tribunal? Or take the perhaps still more striking case of a defendant in an action at law, having a defence on equitable grounds alone, which he is desirous of setting up in the court where the action is pending. Why is he to be driven to the necessity of going to a second court, and there instituting a second and more expensive suit? Why, if his equity depends on the performance of some condition, is he to be driven to another court to obtain the relief which performance of the condition might just as well secure to him in the first?

The equity judges assert that "no solid reason can be given" for the proposed transfer of jurisdiction. We, on the other hand, submit that abundant reason is to be found in all the evils attending on a double jurisdiction and a twofold litigation—two suits relating to the same subject-matter of dispute, in two separate courts, separate pleadings, separate sets of counsel, fresh fees of court—all the harassment, expense, and delay of a suit in Chancery needlessly superadded to the simpler proceeding of an action at law. Surely it cannot seriously be disputed, that if the necessity for resorting to a second court can be dispensed with—wherever justice can be done in one court and one suit—there is every reason for relieving the suitors from the inconvenience, the expense, and the delay of a double litigation.

We guard ourselves by saying, "where justice can be done." We readily admit that where what the objectors not inaptly term the "machinery" of the courts of common law is inadequate to deal with questions of equity, a sufficient reason exists for maintaining the divided jurisdiction. We admit that, to a certain extent, the objection to conferring equitable jurisdiction on the courts of law on this ground is well founded. But, to this extent, care has been taken that the jurisdiction shall not be exercised. The objection becomes unfounded and unjust when it overlooks a distinction which the framers of the bill have not been unmindful to observe. It is true, as is urged by the equity judges, that there are cases in which equitable rights cannot properly be determined without more parties being brought before the court than the parties immediately in presence in action at law. It is true that a court of law has no procedure for bringing such further parties before it. Possibly it may not be desirable that it should have. Actions to recover real property excepted, as to which the present question does not arise, the cases which come before courts of law are seldom of sufficient magnitude to make the multiplying of parties desirable, as the so doing, however necessary in order to settle the rights of all concerned, has a natural tendency, except where great interests are involved, to bring about the result, that, by the time the rights of all parties concerned are adjusted, there remains but little to be divided amongst those who are found to be entitled. Be this as it may, the objection of the equity judges, founded on the inability of the common-law courts to bring other parties before them, has, as regards the present measure, no application. It is not proposed to admit equitable defences in cases to which the objection relates. By the operation of the 86th section of the Common-law Procedure Act of 1854, and the 12th clause of the present bill, courts of law will not be called upon to entertain questions of equity where the equitable rights of parties, other than the immediate parties to the action at law, are involved. It is suggested, indeed, that a court of law might fall into error in deciding whether, in any particular case, the equitable rights of other parties do or do not come into question. But it may be answered, first, that in the more simple cases of equity which present themselves in actions at law, no serious difficulty on this score is likely to arise; secondly, that the supposition that the judges would have any difficulty in deciding such a matter is an assumption of incapacity in them which ought not lightly to be made; thirdly, that the objection, if good for anything, would apply equally to the equitable pleas already permitted to be pleaded; lastly, that in the exercise of the existing jurisdiction no such difficulty has in point of fact been experienced.

A TREATISE on the LAW of PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.
"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book, to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 23, 1860.

We attempted in our last number a brief historical outline of the privileges of the two branches of the Legislature as to the imposition of taxes. We are now to consider the question in controversy between the two Houses.

It being a fundamental principle of the constitution that "no subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of Government, but such as are imposed by his own consent or that of his representatives in Parliament," (1 Bl. Com. 140), to preserve which principle intact the Commons enjoy the exclusive right of originating money bills; and it being conceded that the Lords cannot amend or alter such bills, the question arises, have the Peers violated these principles by rejecting a bill for the repeal of an excise duty passed by the House of Commons? It is asserted that the rejection of the Paper Duty Repeal Bill by the Lords is in fact the imposition of a tax upon the people without their consent. In reply to those who argue, that inasmuch as a bill for the repeal of a tax cannot become law until assented to by the Lords, and that the very fact of their assent being necessary implies their right to reject, it is rejoined that the right of the Lords to impose their veto on a money bill is a mere technical right; that they are compelled to assent to such bill when sent up from the Commons, in the same manner as when a congé d'elire issues from the Sovereign for the election of a bishop, the chapter is bound to appoint the person nominated by the Crown. If this be a correct and legal view of the functions of the Upper House, the power of that House, as to money bills, is reduced to a nullity.

To assert that the Lords cannot reject a money bill is, in effect, to maintain that the Lords are only to register the taxation edicts of the House of Commons, as the ancient Parliaments of France were compelled to register the ordinances of their Sovereign. There are not to be found on the rolls of Parliament any precedents, nor in the writings of any constitutional lawyer any dicta, for so extraordinary a proposition. Except when the House of Lords was voted useless, and abolished by the Long Parliament, this is the first occasion that such an unconstitutional doctrine has been enunciated by statesmen and lawyers. Its tenability cannot be admitted; for it would be not only an infringement of parliamentary law, but a violation of the principle of the constitution, that no tax shall be levied except with the assent of the taxpayer. The 25 Edw. 1, cc. 5, 6, and 7, and the statute "De Tallagio non Concedendo," (34 Edw. 1), which are legislative acts granting or confirming the right of self-taxation, do not enact that no talliage or aid shall be taken without the assent of the Commons of England only, but without "the goodwill and assent of the archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burgesses, and other freemen of the land." The petition of right and the bill of rights do not prohibit the levying of taxes without the consent of the Commons only, but without the consent of Parliament.

If the right of the Lords to reject a money bill be only a technical right, which they ought no longer to exercise, it follows that the Commons can tax the estates of the Peers without their assent—a proceeding directly contrary to the statutory enactments just quoted, and to the very spirit of the constitution. Lord Cranworth's statement, in his speech in reply to Lord Lyndhurst, that there never has been since the Revolution an instance of the Lords rejecting a bill for the repeal of a tax, is quite beside the question. The Revolution did not make any alteration in the relative position of the two Houses towards each other. The Revolution settled the relationship between the Crown and the Parliament, limiting the prerogative of the Sovereign, and defining the liberties of the subject. The precedents relating to money bills found on the journals of the two Houses prior to the Revolution are as valid as those which have been entered thereon subsequent to that great event. The entry on the parliamentary rolls of the reign of Henry IV, quoted in our last number, while protesting against the right of the Lords to originate an impost, expressly asserts, without any reservation, the right of the Peers to consider and assent to the same before it becomes law; the words being, "that neither the Lords on their part, nor the Commons on their part, shall make any report to our lord the King concerning any grant granted by the Commons, and assented to by the Lords, nor any communication relative to the said grant, before the same Lords and Commons be of the same assent and agreement concerning it." It is difficult to conceive how the learned editor of the Parliamentary Remembrancer could construe this entry on the parliamentary rolls as a precedent against the right of the Lords to veto a money bill, or consider the attempt of the Lords in 1407 to originate a bill for prolonging a tax upon wool analogous to the refusal of the Lords in 1860 to sanction the repeal of an excise duty. (Vide 3 Parl. Remem. 126). But the most important entry on the journals upon this subject is the following resolution of the Commons passed in 1689, after the Revolution, which was referred to in our first article; in this resolution the Commons enumerate all their privileges as to money bills, but distinctly admit the Lords' right to reject the same:—"All money aids and taxes to be raised or charged upon the subjects in Parliament are the gift and grant of the Commons in Parliament, and are, and always have been, and ought to be, by the constitution and ancient course and laws of Parliament, and by the ancient and undoubted rights of the Commons of England, the sole and entire gift, grant, and present of the Commons in Parliament, and to be laid, rated, raised, and paid for the public service and use of the Government as the Commons shall direct, limit, and appoint, and modify the same; and the Lords are not to alter such gift, grant, limitation, appointment, or modification of the Commons in any part or circumstance, or otherwise to interfere in such bills than to pass or reject the same for the whole, without any alteration or amendment, though in ease of the subjects. As the Kings and Queens, by the laws and constitution of Parliament, are to take all or to leave all in such gifts, grants, and presents from the Commons, and cannot take part and leave part, so are the Lords to pass all or reject all, without diminution or alteration." (Com. Jour., May 16, 1689). The legal rules for the interpretation of written instruments, being founded on strict logical principles, may be applied to the construction of this entry on the journals. If this resolution, after enumerating certain privileges of the Commons relative to a particular subject, and denying certain rights claimed by the Lords, had not admitted the power of the Lords to exercise a particular right, acting upon the well-known maxim, "expressum facit cessare laticum," (Co. Litt. 210. a.), it would follow, that inasmuch as certain disabilities of the Lords were enumerated in that declaration, it impliedly exempts them from all others, and then even the admission of the Commons of the right of the Lords to reject money bills could not have been denied; a fortiori when the Commons, after expressly enumerating their privileges, distinctly admit the right of the Lords.

It is contended by some, that although the Lords may reject a bill for the creation of a tax, yet to veto a bill passed by the Commons for the repeal of a duty is in fact to impose a tax upon the people without the consent of their representatives. It may be answered, first, that the right of the Lords to reject a money bill being admitted, not any precedent is to be found in the rolls of Parliament, or on the journals of either House, for the limiting the exercise of this right. Secondly, that on several occasions the Lords have rejected bills for the abolition of taxes. It may be that some of the precedents cited by Lord Lyndhurst are not applicable, inasmuch as the bills cited therein may have been thrown out by the Lords because they contained clauses infringing the privileges of their House; but one of the cases quoted by that learned Peer is unanswerable. In 1811 a bill to suspend for one year the duties on corn, and to permit distillation from molasses, having passed the Commons, was thrown out by the Lords. Here is a case very analogous to the Paper Duty Abolition Bill. It appears that the rejection of this measure was brought under the notice of the Commons by the then Minister, who proposed to introduce some other financial measure in consequence thereof. Not the slightest attempt at a protest appears to have been made by the Commons. In discussing this measure we have nothing to do with the motives or reasons which may have induced the Minister to introduce and the Lords to reject this bill respecting corn and molasses. It is only necessary to point out the fact of a bill for relief from taxation having been rejected in 1811 by the Lords without any remonstrance from the Commons. Surely it cannot be argued that the Commons, always so jealous of any interference with their privileges, that bills, though of a local character, have been thrown over the table by them because the Lords had ventured to amend some clause imposing a rate or toll, would have tamely acquiesced in the rejection of the bill of 1811 had they so much as imagined that their most valued privilege had been trespassed upon. But it is said by some that the Lords may exercise the veto, and reject a bill for the repeal of a tax, if the same was originally imposed for commercial or economical, and not for revenue purposes. Thus, they might have rejected the bill for the abolition of the duty on corn, which was levied for the protection of the agricultural interest, but they ought not to have placed their veto on the repeal of the paper duty, that tax having been imposed solely for fiscal purposes. If this were to become a rule of parliamentary law, it is impossible to imagine a device more happily conceived for perpetuating animosities between the two Houses. As all money bills originate with the Commons, is the mere fact of that House declaring a tax, to be raised for the purpose of revenue only, to have the effect of ousting the Lords of their veto? Nothing more likely than that the two Houses should differ as to the object for which an impost is created. It is a maxim of parliamentary law, "that whatever matter arises concerning either House of Parliament ought to be examined, discussed, and argued in that House to which it relates." (1 Bl. Com. 163). Each House will interpret a money bill for itself, and if differences were to arise as to its nature and purpose, what power in the State could act as arbiter? The distinction is against precedent, and inasmuch as it would be impossible to carry it out, it cannot be deemed law, for "lex non intendit aliquid impossibile." The argument, that the rejection by the Lords of a bill for the repeal of a tax is ipso facto the imposition of a burthen upon the people without their consent, may appear plausible; but, if examined, is fallacious. Taxes are either imposed for a limited or for an indefinite period. If a duty be imposed for a limited time, at the expiration of that time it ceases, and can only be re-imposed by an act passed for that purpose. If, on the other hand, it be deemed expedient, for reasons of State, to make some of the taxes permanent imposts, as the land and assessed taxes, the custom and excise duties, &c., the very fact of the imposition of such taxes being only capable of being accomplished by an act of Parliament, which must receive the assent of the Lords before it becomes law, it follows, that inasmuch as the Commons, by granting a permanent tax, impliedly sanctions its continuance until both they and the Lords assent to its repeal, the people, through their representatives, must be taken not only to sanction the imposition of such permanent tax, but to consent to its being levied until abolished by both Lords and Commons; for "Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quàm unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est" (2 Inst. 359) is a maxim of constitutional as well as of common law. The Commons, once having consented to a bill for levying a tax for an indefinite period, know that when such bill becomes law, the tax remains obligatory until repealed by the same authority that enacted it—an act of Parliament, and not a resolution of the House of Commons.

LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

Memorial of the Common-law Commissioners respecting the Law and Equity Bill. Addressed to the Lord Chancellor.

(Concluded from p. 230).

The question as to the adequacy of the "machinery" of the common-law courts being thus reduced to its proper limits, we have no hesitation in affirming that the procedure of these courts, enlarged and amended as it has been in modern times, is abundantly sufficient to enable them to exercise the powers proposed in a perfectly satisfactory manner.

With reference to matters of equity brought forward in pleading, no question as to the adequacy of the procedure can arise. The facts on which the equity arises being set forth in the pleading, the effect of them, if admitted, is at once for the court. If not admitted, the facts will be tried by a jury in the ordinary way. And it may be here incidentally observed, that if in the same action there should also be issues of fact relating to matter of common law to be tried, it is more convenient that both sets of issues should be tried and disposed of in the same inquiry, than that one set of facts should be tried in a court of law, the other in a court of equity. No one, we apprehend, will question the superiority of the common-law procedure over that of equity for the trial of issues of fact; and it may be observed in passing, that as, in the discussion of questions of equity, whosoever they may be raised, questions of disputed fact will frequently arise, this superiority of the common-law procedure for the decision of questions of fact is so far in favour of the transfer of jurisdiction.

As regards equitable matters arising on application to the court, as for relief on conditional equity, or for protection of property, either on apprehended injury or during the pendency of an action, the efficiency of the machinery cannot seriously be questioned. The application would be by motion founded on an affidavit setting forth the facts. If any difficulty should arise in the ulterior stages of the discussion, the court would have ample means of completing the inquiry by an issue, or reference to a Master. The only difference, we apprehend, between such a proceeding and that of a court of equity would be, that the latter would require a written or printed statement of the case, which would be echoed by an affidavit. The common-law process, while it is equally efficacious, is the simpler and less expensive of the two.

The question of the competency of the common-law judges to administer equity is one on which, for obvious reasons, we are reluctant to touch. We may, however, be permitted to observe, that in the simpler questions of equity which are likely to come before courts of common law we cannot anticipate any serious difficulty. While, on the one hand, it may be admitted, that where more complicated rights are involved, such as arise upon intricate questions of real property, of trusts, the administration of estates, and the like, the principles and rules of equity constitute an elaborate and special system of jurisprudence, a perfect knowledge of which it may require special study and practice to acquire, yet it must not be forgotten that one of the principal merits of this system is, that its leading rules—at least, where unembarrassed in their application by the intricacies and subtleties of real property law—rest on the plain and simple principles of rational justice, as distinguished from the more technical and arbitrary rules of positive law.

More especially is this the case with reference to the grounds on which equity relieves against legal rights sought to be enforced in actions at law. To suppose that common-law judges or practitioners either are unacquainted with or will be unable to master a system so simple, would seem to be a gratuitous and unwarranted assumption. No such difficulty has hitherto arisen in administering the powers either of auxiliary or substantive equity heretofore conferred. So far as we are aware, one instance only has occurred of an appeal from the decision of any court of law on an equitable plea, and in that instance the appeal was unsuccessful.

We believe the apprehension of incompetency in this respect to be wholly unfounded. The large knowledge of the law essential to the administration of equity has never been questioned in equity judges; and we are at a loss to understand why credit should not be given to common-law judges for capacity to possess a corresponding knowledge of equity in the limitation of legal rights. When we reflect how many of the great equity judges who have presided in the Court of Chancery and in the House of Lords have been taken from the common-law courts, we are surprised that capacity should be denied to the collective ability of the common-law judges, assisted by a Bar inferior to none in learning and attainments, to deal with the simple questions of equity which are likely to arise incidentally in proceedings at law.

Before we quit this subject we must advert to an argument prominently put forward, namely, that the effect of thus conferring equitable jurisdiction on common-law courts will be to restore in substance the ancient equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer, abolished in recent times by the Legislature. That this view of the matter is altogether erroneous may readily be shewn. It assumes that the jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer as a court of equity was exercised by it incidentally to proceedings pending before it as a court of law. Nothing can be more incorrect. The Court of Exchequer in equity was as distinct from the Court of Exchequer as a court of common law, as the Court of Exchequer now is from the Court of Chancery. The jurisdiction was distinct; all suits were distinct; the procedure was distinct; the officers of the court were not the same; the practitioners were a separate and distinct class. A party seeking protection, or relief from an action pending on the common-law side of the court, was obliged to file a bill in equity, and was in all respects in the same position as if he had gone into Chancery. All the evils of the double jurisdiction arose, without any of those benefits which may be anticipated from enabling full justice to be administered in a single court. Other causes, therefore, making it desirable that the Court of Exchequer as a court of equity should be done away with, its abolition took place, but without the slightest reference to any inconvenience arising from a blending of jurisdiction such as is now proposed. To represent the two cases as analogous is to confound things essentially distinct, and having nothing in common but a name.

Lastly, as to the objection taken to the measure with reference to the proposed court of appeal. It is said, "The appeal is to be, to a court of error—a very competent tribunal for determining the points of law which remain when a jury has solved the questions of fact, but rigid in the extreme in its rules of procedure, and utterly incompetent to dispose of the mixed questions of fact and law that continually arise on appeals from courts of equity." We have here, again, a serious misapprehension. It is assumed that the Court of Exchequer Chamber—the proposed court of appeal—will be simply a court of error in the strict sense of the term; that is to say, a court confined to error appearing on the face of the record, and bound by some rules of procedure differing from those of the court in which the proceedings originated. This is an entire mistake. The Court of Exchequer Chamber, when exercising the appellate functions conferred upon it by the recent Procedure Acts, is no longer a mere court of cassation. It is a court of appeal in the fullest sense of the term; that is to say, it is invested with all the powers, both as to substantive law and procedure, which are possessed by the court from which the appeal comes, and can even draw inferences of fact where the court below could do so.

While upon this subject we cannot but express our surprise that the objectors should have overlooked the fact, that from the decisions of the Court of Exchequer Chamber on appeal there is an ulterior appeal to the House of Lords, where the presence of so many equity authorities will secure the correction, if necessary, of the decisions of the common-law tribunals, and insure the administration of equity according to its established and undoubted rules.

We conceive that we have thus made good the propositions which we undertook to establish—that, starting from the incontestable position that every court should have power to carry on a suit properly commenced in it to final adjudication and completion, as also to protect rights which are clearly within the compass of its jurisdiction, we have shewn that the powers which it is proposed to confer on the common-law courts are essentially necessary to this end; that they have been already partially given, and so far beneficially exercised; and, lastly, that, so far as it is now proposed to go, the procedure will be fully equal to the purpose.

The equity judges declare that "no attempt should be made to alter our tribunals until a careful revision has been made of our whole law." But is not this to put off the work to the Greek kalends? We readily agree that the bringing the conflict of law and equity into unison would be better dealt with as a part of the substantive than of the ancillary law, and would be best effected by abrogating from the body of our law rights which ought not to be, and which equity does not allow to be, enforced, instead of by seeking to attain the end by a fusion of jurisdiction and procedure. But who is there among us so sanguine as to expect that this great work of the revision of the whole body of our law will be undertaken, much less accomplished, in our days? In the meantime, the suitor, bandied to and fro from law to equity, and from equity to law, suffers what he feels and knows to be (with whatever complacency legal practitioners may from habit be brought to look on the matter) a practical and substantial grievance. To whatever extent, though it may be but a partial one, that grievance can be abated—to whatever extent the great desideratum of uniformity in the law, as administered by the judicial tribunals of this country, can be effected—to that extent, at least, the practical good should be secured, although the means resorted to may not be such as a scientific jurist might deem the most eligible. At all events, if any immediate, though but partial, remedy can be applied, it would surely be unwise to refuse to accept it because it is not presented as a part of a general revision of the whole body of our laws, of which no reasonable hope presents itself even in the indefinite future.

We have the honour to remain, my Lord,

Your obedient and faithful servants,

A. E. COCKBURN.

SAMUEL MARTIN.

G. BRAMWELL.

The Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, including its Application to JOINT-STOCK and other COMPANIES. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It is very rarely indeed that a treatise every way so creditable to English jurisprudence issues from our press. It is throughout characterised by great breadth of view and skill in execution, and is altogether such a work as we should be willing to be judged by amongst Continental and American lawyers. We shall only add that this treatise contains all the recent decisions on the subject of partnership and joint-stock companies law, upon many of which there are valuable observations by Mr. Lindley. We repeat that the whole work is one of which English lawyers may well be proud; and we have no doubt that it will long continue to be a leading text-book, to be found in the library of every lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal, April, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JUNE 30, 1860.

THE establishment of a Law University, which we have on more than one occasion advocated, has, we observe, been made the subject of a very able paper read before the Law Amendment Society by Mr. J. Napier Higgins*. It is a subject, no doubt, of great importance, and has produced some very useful suggestions from many learned and able individuals. Mr. Macqueen read a lecture in Lincoln's Inn Hall in 1851, before the Benchers; Mr. W. D. Lewis read a paper before the Juridical Society; and Mr. Cookson read another before the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association in 1855. In all these disquisitions many improvements upon the present system, or rather want of system, are put forth, but in none with greater force and ability than in the paper we have first alluded to.

We think that the Benchers of the Inns of Court—that is to say, the majority of them—have not, with reference to legal education, dealt fairly with the country or with Parliament.

Had the Inns of Court, as a great legal establishment, been subjected to the same process before our courts of justice as other educational institutions, such as ordinary grammar-schools, they would doubtless have been greatly reformed, and their large funds applied to the purposes for which they ought justly to be appropriated. The constitution of our courts of justice, consisting almost entirely of the persons whose conduct as trustees would have to be taken into consideration, effectually prevents resort to them. Hence the commission to inquire into the state of the Inns of Court was issued, and although in one respect it was open to the grave objection that its members were almost exclusively Benchers—the very persons whose administration of the funds of their several societies had been severely and repeatedly censured—the commission produced, in so far as its recommendations for the future were concerned, a very satisfactory Report. That Report, we believe, was not acted upon by Parliament, solely in consequence of there being at least a tacit understanding that, as far as possible, its recommendations should be carried into effect by the Benchers themselves. This has not been done, and the important events of the last few years—such as the Russian and Indian wars, and other important foreign and political affairs—appear to have withdrawn, temporarily only, we hope, the public attention from the subject of legal education.

The delay of the Benchers is, we believe, attributable to a slight majority of them, who have done much to obstruct the exertions of such men as Sir R. Bethell and Vice-Chancellor Wood in the cause of legal education. It is to be regretted that the deliberations of the Benchers upon such subjects (especially as they are a self-elected body) should not either be in public or be made public; for, if that were the case, we confidently predict that the learned Attorney-General and the Vice-Chancellor would soon have with them a large majority.

Let us not for a moment be supposed to undervalue what has already been done by the Inns of Court since the year 1845 for legal education, or the labours of the very learned and able men who have been appointed readers or lecturers. What they have done suggests to us how much more might be effected if the Benchers could only be induced to take part in the formation of a grand and comprehensive Legal University. Doubtless this might be best done by themselves, and with as little external interference as possible, except so far as the assistance of the Legislature might be requisite to carry forward their scheme. But if the Benchers of the Inns of Court, or rather the majority of them, refuse or decline to carry out the suggestions of the commissioners, it will become the duty of Parliament to interfere by effective legislation, and no longer to trust to the promised fulfilment of the mere recommendations of a report.

In the paper read before the Law Amendment Society, the decline of legal education is, upon the authority of Lord Campbell in his Lives of the Chancellors, attributed to the "system of private pupillage in barristers' chambers," before the attainment of a general and scientific knowledge of the law.

The professorships at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the recently-established Readers at the Inns of Court, and, in the case of solicitors and attorneys, the lectures and examinations of the Incorporated Law Society, have, though without any general plan or harmonious action, done much, but by no means all that can or ought to be done, for the requirements by the country under the head of legal education.

The unpaid magistracy of this country, our foreign ministers and ambassadors, with those attached as assistants to their labours, our consuls abroad, our colonial and Indian judges, independently of our barristers, have not at present the means whereby they can properly or readily qualify themselves for the important posts they either hold or may be called upon to hold.

The paper read before the Law Amendment Society suggests that "the four Inns of Court and the Incorporated Law Society should be constituted a Law University for the purposes there mentioned; that there should be a matriculation common to all students; and that, for a given period, according to the analogy of both English and foreign Universities, the course of study should be the same for all. At the end of the period, it is suggested that either the same University, or the Inns of Court, retaining their present special functions, should undertake the special education and the duty of selection of candidates for the Bar; and that in the same way, after such period of study, common to all students of the University, the University, or the Incorporated Law Society, should discharge the special functions now assigned to the latter body." The learned author of the paper adds, "Let the University itself have within its particular province the various extra professional classes of persons, and also the peculiar subjects to which I have referred. A student intending to become a barrister might enter the University and some Inn of Court at the same time; and so articulated clerks to attorneys might enter the University and the Incorporated Law Society together. The Inns of Court and the Law Institution would thus still retain their privileges, and each would continue to have its specialité. The only difference would be, that no one could become a barrister or attorney who had not matriculated at the University, and passed a subsequent examination there."

Now, fully agreeing as we do with the necessity of establishing a Legal University, we confess we feel inclined to differ from the learned reader of the paper as to the mode of its composition. We confess to a strong feeling, perhaps it may be a prejudice, in favour of the Inns of Court alone being formed into a Legal University. We think that they might be so combined together in their organisation and pursuits as completely to fulfil the task of educating, in every branch of jurisprudence which their future career may require, our bar, our judges, our magistrates, consuls, ambassadors, and legislators.

With regard to a very important body of men whose legal education is of great consequence to the country—we mean attorneys and solicitors—we do not think that we should act wisely in taking it in any way out of the hands of the Incorporated Law Society.

We hope that the important suggestions in the paper of Mr. Higgins will meet with full consideration from the public at large, as well as from the society before which it was read.

RATHER more than a hundred years ago it was found necessary to render prosecutions for perjury and subornation of perjury more easy and effectual, and accordingly the 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, was passed for that purpose. That statute, after providing for the simplifying and shortening of indictments in such cases, then enacted, that, "to prevent great offenders from escaping punishment by reason of the expense attending such prosecutions," any of "her Majesty's justices of assize, or Nisi Prius, or general gaol delivery, or of any of the great sessions of the principality of Wales or of the counties palatine," might direct any person examined as a witness before them to be prosecuted for perjury, in case it appeared to them that there was a reasonable cause for such prosecution, and to assign to the party injured, or other person undertaking such prosecution, counsel, who were thereby required to do their duty without any fee, gratuity, or reward for the same. The prosecution was to be carried on without fees, and a certificate of the same having been so directed was to be given to the person undertaking the prosecution; but it was also provided that no such certificate should be given in evidence upon any trial to be had against any person upon a prosecution so directed.

By the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 19, it was thought expedient to amend and extend the last-mentioned act; and it is accordingly enacted, that not only the judges or judge of any of the superior courts of common law or equity, or any of her Majesty's justices or commissioners of assize, Nisi Prius, oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, but also "any justices of the peace, recorder or deputy recorder, chairman, or other judge, holding any general or quarter sessions of the peace, or any commissioner of bankruptcy or insolvency, or any judge or deputy judge of any county court or any court of record, or any justices of the peace in special or petty sessions, or any sheriff or his lawful deputy, before whom any writ of inquiry or writ of trial from any of the superior courts shall be executed, in case it shall appear to him or them that any person has been guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury in any evidence given before him in any proceeding, may direct such person to be prosecuted, and commit him to prison in default of bail, and may bind over any person to prosecute or give evidence;" and "give to the party so bound to prosecute a certificate of the same being directed, which certificate shall be given without any fee or charge, and shall be deemed sufficient proof of such prosecution having been directed as aforesaid; and upon the production thereof, the costs of such prosecution are required to be allowed by the Court before which any persons shall be prosecuted or tried in pursuance of such direction as aforesaid, unless such last-mentioned Court specially otherwise direct;" and it afterwards provides that no such direction or certificate shall be given in evidence upon any trial had against any person upon a prosecution so directed as aforesaid.

The effect of these enactments is to place in the hands of a great number of persons, some more some less prudent, the power of depriving of his liberty, or placing at the bar on a criminal and serious charge, an innocent man who may have incurred their suspicion, and at the same time leaves him without any redress when he has cleared himself of the charge. Justices of the peace do not always possess the greatest penetration into character, or possess the most impartial or clear judgment; and county court judges are not by any means infallible, or free from prejudice or passion. They form a numerous class; yet, if actuated by no corrupt motives, they may exercise the discretion given them by the enactments mentioned above so as to do a grievous wrong to a perfectly innocent man, without being in any way answerable to him for their acts. They may be misled by his own manner, by the complexion of the case, by the falsehood of his opponents, or by their demeanour. Their own judgment may be warped by sudden heat; yet in any of these events, if they commit to prison, and order a prosecution to be instituted, the consequences to the victim of their error are most serious, and may be irremediable; yet there is no equivalent for him—all the risk of exercising this power is on one side. Upon the authority of Lord Tenterden in Garnett v. Ferrand, (6 B. & Cr. 611), no action can be brought against any judge of a court of record for any thing done in the exercise of his judicial functions; and undoubtedly the exercise of this power would be held to come within the scope of that rule. So far between the injured person and the judge.

But neither, it appears by the late case of Pitsohn v. Mackinder, (29 L. J., C. P., 107), has he any remedy against his opponent, though he may have been the real cause of the injury—his perjury the true impelling power of the judge's direction to prosecute. The real perjurer in such a case is thus guilty of a double wrong, and may yet escape unhurt. His perjury in the first instance would enable him to succeed before the judge in his own claim, and also thus indirectly be the cause of his opponent's prosecution. The case of Pitsohn v. Mackinder was an action brought by the plaintiff for falsely and maliciously procuring the judge of the County Court of Rutlandshire to direct the plaintiff to be prosecuted for perjury. The defendant in this action sued the plaintiff in the county court for a debt to which the plaintiff had set up a set-off; whereupon the defendant swore that the latter account had been settled, and shewed a signature of the plaintiff's name, and swore that he had so signed it in the defendant's presence: the plaintiff swore that he had not signed it, but his manner being unsatisfactory, and because the judge entertained a prejudice against him for his conduct on previous occasions, the judge ordered a prosecution, committed the plaintiff, and bound the defendant over to prosecute. The plaintiff was indicted at the assizes, the defendant appeared as prosecutor, but the handwriting was proved not to be that of the plaintiff, and he was acquitted. He brought his action, was nonsuited, and the nonsuit held to be right. He could not be considered to have caused the prosecution, for he was bound over to prosecute; nor could he be said to have put the criminal law in motion—that the county court judge had done. This is undoubtedly a case in which a great wrong has been done, but no remedy; it shews the danger of intrusting the power given by the above act to so great a number of judicial officers, and those local; and if the considerations of general expediency or public policy are deemed sufficiently weighty to forbid our Courts to interfere to compel compensation to a claimant who has suffered damage at the hands of another in such a case as this, yet the danger of exercising this power ought to be placed before the eyes of those within whose province the Legislature has thought fit to place it. The great confidence that is placed in them, and the withdrawal of control, should render them the more diffident, and anxious not to abuse it.

THE BANKRUPTCY FOLIO.

AN agitation is in progress for the purpose of obtaining a reduction in the bankruptcy folio from ninety to seventy-two words. There can be no doubt that the scale of measurement should be the same in bankruptcy as (since the Orders in Chancery and Lunacy, abolishing the old ecclesiastical folio of ninety words, which came into operation in July, 1854) it has been in all other courts. Whether a corresponding reduction of the allowance per folio should also be made is another question. The alteration is recommended by the Incorporated Law Society and by Mr. Commissioner Holroyd.

MARITIME CAPTURE.

By an Order in Council published in last Tuesday's Gazette, after reciting—"Whereas, in the event of hostilities commencing between her Majesty and her august ally the Emperor of the French on the one hand, and the Emperor of China on the other hand, it is the intention and desire of her Majesty and of his Majesty the Emperor of the French to act during such hostilities in strict conformity with the declaration respecting maritime law signed by the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey, assembled in Congress at Paris, and dated the 16th April, 1856; and whereas her Majesty is willing to extend the benefits of the said declaration of Paris to all powers which may be neutral in the said hostilities," it is ordered, "that, so far as regards the ships of any neutral power, the flag of any such power shall cover the enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband of war; so that no goods of enemies found on board any ship belonging to the subjects of such neutral power, or to those inhabiting within the dominions of any such power, and duly entitled to use the flag of such power, shall be subject to capture or condemnation by reason only of such goods being enemies' goods; all other liabilities to capture and condemnation respectively of enemies' goods and neutral ships being reserved, and remaining in all respects as before the declaration of the said Congress at Paris of the 16th April, 1856.

"And it is further ordered, that neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, shall not be liable to capture, under the enemy's flag, by reason only of the said goods being under the enemy's flag; all other liabilities to capture and condemnation of neutral goods being reserved, and remaining in all respects as before the declaration of the said Congress at Paris of the 16th April, 1856: provided always, and it is hereby ordered, that nothing herein contained shall be applicable to, or shall be construed, deemed, or taken so as to operate or apply to or in favour of, any person, ship, or goods whatsoever which may be captured for breaking or attempting to break, or which may be lawfully adjudged to have broken or attempted to break, any blockade maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy; but that all such persons, ships, and goods may be duly taken cognisance of, proceeded upon, adjudicated, dealt with, and treated in all respects and to all purposes, according to the course of Admiralty and the law of nations, as if this Order had never been made, anything hereinbefore to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding.

"And it is further ordered, that notwithstanding the existence of hostilities between her Majesty and her august ally on the one hand, and the Emperor of China on the other hand, and during the continuance thereof, all and every the subjects of her Majesty and of her august ally the Emperor of the French shall and may, during such hostilities, freely trade at and with all ports and places wheresoever situate in the dominions of China, and also with all persons whomsoever, as well subjects of the Emperor of China as others, residing or trading within any part of the dominions of the said Emperor.

"And it is further ordered and declared, that if any Chinese ship or vessel shall be captured or taken by any of her Majesty's vessels or forces, having on board any merchandise or goods being the bona fide property of any subject or subjects of her Majesty or of her august ally the Emperor of the French, such merchandise or goods shall not be subject or liable to be condemned as prize, but shall, on the proof of such property as aforesaid, be restored to the owner or owners thereof: provided always, and it is hereby ordered, that this Order shall not apply, or be construed, deemed, or taken to operate to or apply to or in favour of contraband of war, or to trading in supply of or dealing with any articles or things which it may be declared by her Majesty and her august ally shall be deemed and taken as contraband of war, or to any trading or attempt to trade with places subject to effective blockade by the ships or fleets of her Majesty and her august ally, or either of them; and it is further ordered that her Majesty's officers and subjects, and especially her Majesty's Courts and officers exercising any prize jurisdiction, do take notice hereof, and govern themselves accordingly."

CRIME IN ENGLAND.—The "Judicial Statistics" of England and Wales for 1859 have been issued from the Home Office, and laid before Parliament, with an introductory report by Mr. Redgrave, "Criminal Registrar." The number of persons apprehended for indictable offences in the year was 27,119, of whom only 16,674 were sent for trial, and 12,470 (not quite 46 per cent. of the number apprehended) were convicted. These numbers pertain to the more serious offences, but there were besides 392,810 persons proceeded against summarily before magistrates, and 257,810, or nearly two-thirds of the whole, were convicted. Many of these persons were charged before the justices with offences rather of a civil than a criminal sort, but a large proportion of them were of a grave character. 133,157 persons were charged with stealing, poaching, assault, or malicious destruction of property; while at least 163,912 more were accused of offences which indicate a loose disorderly character, such as drunkenness, vagrancy, unlawful possession of goods, misdemeanours under the Police Acts, and the like. The whole number of persons proceeded against during the year, whether by indictment or summarily before magistrates, was 419,929; and a table is given shewing that 136,486 (less than a third) were known to the police as "suspicious characters," vagrants, drunkards, prostitutes, or thieves; 133,359 were persons of good character, and of the remaining 160,084 the character was unknown. But in order to a comparison with past years, we must confine ourselves to the commitments for trial by indictment, and in such a comparison it is always necessary to bear in mind that the Criminal Justice Act of 1855 has since that date withdrawn a considerable number of offences from this table, and transferred them to the magistrates. But we have the satisfaction of seeing that the commitments in 1859 were 6·6 per cent. less than in 1858, and 17·7 per cent. less than in 1857. In the year 1859 offences against the person decreased 5·8 per cent.; offences against property committed with violence (including the chief crimes, burglary, house-breaking, and robbery) decreased 15·8 per cent.; the decrease in stealing without violence was 5·4, and was very marked in sheep-stealing; larceny in dwelling-houses, embezzlement, receiving stolen goods, and fraud, forgery, and offences against the currency decreased 11·7 per cent., chiefly the offence of uttering counterfeit coin; in malicious offences against property there was a slight increase. But to shew more completely the state of crime for a series of years Mr. Redgrave distinguishes between crimes which spring from the state of the general community, and are of singularly uniform recurrence, and those which spring from a separate criminal class, liable to be increased or diminished by circumstances—the price of food, the state of employment, the system of police; and selecting crimes for which no disturbing changes have been made in the law, except by a great amelioration of punishment, he has constructed two tables shewing the commitments of the last thirty years. The first table is as follows:—

Wounding with intent to do bodily harm ..	605	739	1157	1173	1949	1805
Manslaughter .. ..	913	1024	1050	980	1144	1144
Rape and attempts ..	837	973	1221	1263	1395	1289
Bigamy .. .. .	186	215	354	369	404	449

In these thirty years, Mr. Redgrave remarks, the population cannot be estimated to have increased less than 40 per cent., and property probably in a much greater ratio. But there has been no corresponding increase in the commitments for murder, and in those for manslaughter the increase has not amounted to half the rate of increase of the population. In stabbing and attempts to murder there has been a progressive increase, which shewed itself in a marked degree on the extensive abolition of capital punishments in 1837. The commitments for rape and attempts to ravish at once attained a higher rate on the abolition of the capital punishment in 1841, but have since been without important change. In bigamy, a large progressive increase marks each quinquennial period. These crimes are chiefly those in which the detective agency of the increased police establishments would be brought to bear, rather than their powers of prevention, and the increase described may, in a considerable degree, be attributed to the greater ratio of detection. The other table, which is as follows, relates to crimes which may be ascribed to the existence of a criminal class:—

	1830-4.	1835-9.	1840-4.	1845-9.	1850-4.	1853-6.
Robbery on the person, &c.	2645	1601	2026	1783	2405	2243
Cattle and sheep stealing ..	2453	2465	2984	2187	1796	1492
Embezzlement .. .. .	1169	1384	1805	1815	2048	2085
Fraud .. .. .	1978	2225	3000	2808	3532	4139
Arson .. .. .	367	294	680	708	913	664
Coining and uttering .. ..	1836	1718	2047	1946	3337	3418

For the last fifteen years, it will be seen, the commitments for burglary and housebreaking have been without any sensible variation; for robbery on the person, the increase, comparing the last with the first fifteen years, has not exceeded 13·7 per cent.; for horse, sheep, and cattle stealing, in the same period, there has been a large absolute decrease in the commitments. These are all crimes in which the repressive agency of the police would be felt. The large increase in the other crimes in this table shews how skill has been succeeding violence, and marks the tendency of modern crime.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 7, 1860.

SOME time back (see 5 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 239, 283) we devoted a couple of articles to the discussion of the liability of the owner of an animal for the injuries which it might inflict on other persons. We divided the cases into two classes, viz. those where the injury was not inflicted on the land of the owner of the animal, and those where it was. With respect to the first class, we shewed that a man was not liable for the acts of his animals mausuetæ nature, unless he knew that they were dangerous; but that he was liable for those of his animals feræ nature without such knowledge; and we ventured to suggest that the test of an animal belonging to the one or the other of these kinds should be, whether or not it was an animal generally found domesticated in this country. With respect to the second class of cases, we came to the conclusion that the question of liability for the keeping of dangerous animals on the owner's premises stands apparently on the same footing as the liability of a man for setting traps, or keeping any dangerous instruments, or doing any other dangerous act on his premises, by which, unintentionally, a stranger is injured; that this latter liability had been much discussed, and was still a question of difficulty and doubt; but that, on the whole, we thought that the current of authority ran in favour of the position, that a man may keep any dangerous thing on his premises as long as he keeps it so as not to cause injury to an innocent person, who is on the premises by his invitation or license, express or implied.

We did not then think it necessary to allude to the cases of injury caused to adjoining property by machinery used on the owner's land, the cases being of such common occurrence, and the law on the subject being so well known. Our memory, however, has lately been refreshed as to a peculiar class of such cases, which forms an exception to the general rule, and which is likely to play now-a-days so important a part in the business of our courts that we think it worth while to draw our readers' attention to it. We allude to the liability of an owner for damage caused by such machinery, when the use of it has been sanctioned by the Legislature, in which case it appears, that if the owner use due and proper care for the safe use of the machinery, he will not be liable for any public nuisance or private injury, notwithstanding that the machinery is used not so much for public advantage as private gain. Now that private bill legislation has become so extensive, and begun to play so important a part in the affairs of the country, and especially now that the country is intersected in every direction by railways, we cannot rate too high the importance of the above rule, and need no apology for presenting it to our readers.

As long ago as the year 1832 this question, or rather a branch of it, came before the Courts in the case of Rees v. Pease, (4 B. & Ad. 30). In that case it appeared, that by an act of Parliament, reciting that a railway between certain points would be of great public utility, and would materially assist the agricultural interest and general traffic of the country, power was given to a company to make such railway according to a plan deposited with the clerk of the peace, from which plan they were not to deviate more than 100 yards; and that, by a subsequent act, the company was authorised to use locomotive engines on the railway. The railway was made parallel and adjacent to an ancient highway, and in some places within five yards of it, and it did not appear whether the line could or could not have been made, in these instances, to pass at a greater distance. The locomotive engines frightened the horses of persons using them on the highway, and an indictment was preferred against the company for a nuisance. It was held, that the interference with the rights of the public must be taken to have been contemplated and sanctioned by the Legislature, since the words of the statute authorising the use of the engines were unqualified; and the public benefit derived (whether it would have excused the alleged nuisance at common law or not) shewed, at least, that there was nothing unreasonable in a clause of an act of Parliament giving such unqualified authority. This case, therefore, decided, that where the use of machinery is authorised by an act of Parliament, the owners are not liable to the public for such use being a nuisance; assuming however, of course, (as we shall see from the next case), that the user is a proper one—a point not raised in this case.

Lately, in the case of Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, nearly the same question has been before the Courts, the difference being, that whereas the former case was one of public nuisance, the latter was one of private injury. The action was brought for damage caused to the plaintiff by firing his wood by means of ashes falling from the engines of the defendants, one count being for negligence, and another for throwing hot coals on the defendants' embankment, knowing that the grass thereon was in a combustible state. It appeared that the grass on the embankment of the railway, and the adjoining land of the plaintiff, was very dry and combustible; that a coal had come from an engine of the defendants, and set fire to this grass, and thus caused injury to the wood; but whether the coal fell on the embankment or the land was not shewn. Everything had been done to make the engine safe; it had a cap to its chimney, its ash-box was secured, and it travelled at the slowest pace consistent with practical utility. The verdict was for the plaintiff, and the defendants obtained in the Court of Exchequer (3 H. & Norm. 743) a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the grounds that the verdict was against evidence, that there was a misdirection in telling the jury that no amount of skill and care used to prevent the escape of the coals would answer the charge of negligence, and that the conduct of the plaintiff in allowing his grass to be in a combustible state was immaterial. The Court of Exchequer, on the plaintiff shewing cause, held, that the railway company was liable—a judgment which was reversed on appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, (5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1032); Cockburn, C. J., saying, "I am of opinion that the decision of the Court below cannot be upheld, and there must be a new trial. I collect from the reasoning in the judgment of Bramwell, B., in the court below, that the view taken by that Court is this—that whereas accidents occasionally arise from the use of fire as the means of locomotion, they are to be considered as a necessary and natural incident to such use of fire, and that therefore the company is liable in respect of the accident from the use of the locomotive, though every possible known precaution has been taken, and are responsible for the accident, in so far as it is necessarily contingent on the use of the locomotive. If this be the view of the case held by the Court of Exchequer, it is one which we cannot uphold, as being at variance with the principle established in Res v. Pease, and which this Court maintains and adopts. Although, where a person keeps a dangerous animal or instrument, or other means, whereby danger arises, he is, independently of any actual negligence on his part, liable for the damage done, yet, when the Legislature has sanctioned and legitimatised the use of a certain instrument, provided every precaution has been taken and observed with due and reasonable diligence, it must be held that the person using such instrument is not liable unless there is actual negligence in the use of it. This is the principle which governs the case of Res v. Pease, and I think it consonant with reason and justice. As a question of fact, it is admitted that the company, in the use of the fire, endeavoured to protect property from injury by all known means and contrivances, and in my judgment they were not guilty of negligence on the first count. As to the second count, inasmuch as Bramwell, B., said the fire arose from negligence in managing the fire; there is nothing in the case to lead us to suppose that the jury did not find their verdict on the first count, and on that alone, and so the second count was not, in effect, submitted to the jury."

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY, July 8.

MASTERS AND OPERATIVES BILL.

Lord St. Leonards, in moving the second reading of this bill, said it was not anticipated that it would directly operate against such a strike as had lately taken place in London. It was hardly possible for any council of conciliation to give effect to any proposal when a strike had actually taken place, and when each party, exasperated against the other, looked simply to its own means of carrying its own object. But should this bill be passed, and councils of conciliation established, it was hoped that the association of masters and operatives in these councils, in the minor disputes which must arise from time to time, would produce such a good understanding between them as to prevent strikes taking place at all. When they reflected on the mischief and misery which these strikes occasioned, on the pecuniary losses to which they subjected the employers, and on the sufferings and privations which they inflicted upon the men, it was impossible to overrate the enormity of the evil, or the urgent necessity for a remedy. If the relation between masters and operatives was fairly looked at, it would be seen that the operative was really a limited partner in the concern, drawing his share of the profits in the shape of wages, although not responsible for the liabilities of the firm. It was obvious, therefore, that he had a direct interest in the continuance of the business, and that mutual confidence and regard between the employer and employed were essential to the interests of both. The late strike arose out of the demand, on the part of the men, to receive ten hours' pay for nine hours' work, which was refused by the masters. Now, it was not denied that the sacrifice of this hour would involve the loss of so much work; but it was acknowledged that the object of the strike was to compel employers to engage a larger number of men to perform in nine hours the work which now occupied ten; the present rate of wages being maintained. Such a proceeding was a violation of all the laws of political economy, and, if successful, would remove the question of wages from the natural influence of supply and demand. Many attempts had been made to prevent the evils arising from disputes between masters and workmen, but in vain. In France the attempt had been made with greater success. In 1806 Napoleon established these councils on a new basis. They were composed both of manufacturers and workmen, but the manufacturers had greatly the preponderance of influence. In 1809 the councils were somewhat differently constituted, the overlookers being members of it. In this country the overlookers were understood to be the mere agents of the masters, but in France they were not altogether regarded in that light. In the revolution of 1848 there was, of course, a cry for equality. A new law was passed, placing the masters and workmen on the same footing of equality, and they together formed the council of conciliation. The constitution of these councils established a singular system of cross-voting. The workmen chose nine of their body, out of whom the masters selected three, who represented the workmen. The masters, in turn, had to choose nine of their body, out of whom the workmen selected three, who represented the masters. The workmen chose a president out of the masters, and the masters a president out of the workmen, who presided for three months alternately. This scheme did not work well, and the consequence was, that the present law was passed, upon which the councils of conciliation were now established in France. The councils were elected by workmen who must be twenty-five years of age, who must have worked five years at their trades, and must have resided three years in the district for which they voted. A workman, to be qualified to be elected a member of council, must be thirty years of age, and able to read and write. The president and vice-president were appointed for a term of three years by the Government. In addition to the councils, a bureau de conciliation was established, before whom both masters and workmen were brought. If the parties did not agree, they then went before the council of conciliation, which had judicial powers, so that it could compel the parties to come to an understanding, and to enforce the awards. Imperfect as this tribunal was, it worked a wonderful amount of good in France. A great number of disputes had been satisfactorily settled in the first instance before the bureau, and which consequently never came before the councils at all. These tribunals, however, never had taken cognizance of the question of wages. Sir Joseph Paxton had stated before a committee of the other House that he had to construct a work thirty miles out of Paris. There were 200 French masons employed, and a number of English masons. The English masons were more expert than the French, and the French, finding that they were not obtaining the same wages, became discontented, although they got the highest wages ever earned by masons in France. The case, however, was not one for the councils, and they could not interfere between the parties. Having called their Lordships' attention to the French law, he would briefly state what was the present state of the English law. In the reign of George II all disputes between masters and workmen were referred to justices of the peace. In the reign of George III an act was passed giving masters and men the power of referring disputes to arbitration or to a magistrate. In 1824 a committee sat, which resulted in the passing of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 96, an act which was still the law. By that act referees were to be selected out of many who were nominated, but if the referees could not agree a magistrate was to decide. But by sect. 13 of that act masters and operatives might, by agreement, have recourse to any other mode of arbitration they might choose, and any award made in any arbitration under such agreement could be enforced as legal. The law as it stood gave masters and workmen the option of going before a magistrate to obtain a decision upon their differences, or they could select referees, or they could adopt any other mode of arbitration they pleased. The section to which he had referred had become a dead letter, but the existing law gave all parties power to adopt by agreement any form of arbitration they chose. The necessity of the bill was, that under the section of the present act there must be a fresh nomination of referees to decide upon each particular case. What the masters as well as the operatives desired was a court to which they could have recourse in all cases of dispute. One objection to the present act was, that it expressly prohibited justices from dealing with questions of wages, except with the consent of both parties. Another objection was, that the act 5 Geo. 4, c. 96, only applied to work done or being done, and did not refer to future contracts. In truth, however, the act was absolutely a dead letter, and even those persons who had been most active in "strikes" were ignorant of the existence of a law which permitted of arbitration in cases of disputes. This bill had been recommended by high authorities. The committee of 1824, which sat thirty-six days, and examined 129 witnesses, reported that the practice of settling disputes by arbitration between masters and workmen had been attended with good effects, and that it was desirable that the laws which direct and regulate arbitration should be considered, and made applicable to all trades. In 1856 a committee, which sat sixteen days, and examined twenty-eight witnesses, reported as follows:—

"From the evidence before them, your committee cannot but arrive at the conclusion that the attention of the Legislature might with advantage be directed to the subject of this inquiry, and are of opinion that the formation of courts of conciliation in the country, more particularly in the large commercial and manufacturing and mining districts, would be beneficial. Your committee would suggest that such a measure might be introduced as an amendment in the present Arbitration Act, by a reconstruction of that act in the 10th and 13th sections, by which means both masters and operatives would be enabled, each from their own class of calling, to appoint referees, an equal number by each party, having power to elect a chairman, unconnected with either side, having a casting vote; such a tribunal to be appointed for a certain period, and not for any particular controversy."

Again: the select committee appointed in the present year, which sat eleven days, and examined fourteen witnesses, came to "the unanimous opinion that the voluntary formation of equitable councils of conciliation would tend to promote a more friendly understanding between the employers and employed, to soften any irritation that might arise, and in most cases to prevent the growth of such a spirit of antagonism as too often leads to a strike;" and they added:—

"Your committee have considered the bill which has been referred to them by the House, and are unanimously of opinion that if the bill passes into a law, it will promote the welfare of, and good understanding between, masters and operatives, and be advantageous to the country."

These three committees of the other House, after much deliberation, and after hearing many witnesses, had all come to the same conclusion, and their opinions would, he hoped, have due weight with their Lordships. In taking charge of this measure he had considered it neither as a workman's nor a master's bill. He was actuated by no class prejudices; but regarded this simply as a great social question; and only recommended the bill because he believed it was calculated to create an amicable feeling between masters and workmen, and to prevent those strikes which were attended with such deplorable results. The provisions of the bill required that the first step should be to go to the Crown for a license. When the license was obtained, the court of conciliation was to have all the powers which now existed under the act of Geo. 4, with the important qualification that the court was to have no jurisdiction unless the question in dispute was submitted to it by both parties; so that the bill would not give any power at all to the court of conciliation unless both parties went before it; but after both parties had chosen to submit any question to the court, there would be power to compel them to go on, although one or the other might wish to withdraw. He denied any one to show that there was any difference in principle between the law as it now stood and this bill, and he therefore trusted their Lordships would allow it to be read a second time.

Lord Rosebury, who had given notice to move that the bill be read a second time that day six months, said that so great was the respect which he bore for the character, abilities, and great legal attainments of his noble and learned friend, that it was with the greatest hesitation that he proposed an amendment; but his noble and learned friend had failed to remove the grave objections to which the bill was open, and for the explanation of which he entreated their indulgence. He denied that the existing law was so imperfect as was alleged. Although the report of a select committee of the House of Commons was, no doubt, entitled to respect, there might be substantial reasons why their Lordships should hesitate before they gave implicit confidence to the recommendations of such a body. It was quite possible that the members of the committee might have been influenced by prejudice, and might have conducted the examination of witnesses so as to support their own views. He was confirmed in these suspicions by the singular unanimity which prevailed in this committee, and by the fact that the evidence of the only witness who went counter to the views which they entertained was quickly cut short. Parliament ought to give more consideration to this important subject before any new legislation was attempted with regard to it. He held that the present law might be modified and amended so as to meet the requirements of the case, without bringing forward a measure like the present. The great difficulty was to find a fair and impartial tribunal; and in his opinion there were insurmountable objections to the machinery proposed in the bill. The council would, of course, include two antagonistic elements—the representatives of the workmen would uphold one view, those of the masters another. The question was how the chairman was to be appointed. None of the witnesses examined before the committee appeared able to solve the problem. One suggested that the president of the council of conciliation—which, in his belief, would prove only a council of wrangle—should be selected by a lottery. Another proposed that the masters should appoint the chairman one day and the workmen the next; but the result of that proceeding would be simply to reverse the votes on alternate days. The witnesses generally objected to the more rational proposition of arbitration by the justices. The witnesses objected that to go before the justices would have the appearance of a criminal proceeding. But was not this sad trifling? The justices were frequently called upon to decide between masters and servants employed in agricultural husbandry, and a more impartial tribunal could not be found. He believed that a court of petty sessions would be more likely to give a satisfactory judgment than a council of conciliation chosen under the provisions of this bill. There were much graver objections to the bill, which the noble and learned lord seemed to acknowledge when he stated that he should offer some amendments in committee. Let their Lordships reflect upon the number of councils of conciliation which would be necessary. It was stated that there were not less than 400 separate branches of trade in this country, employing no less than 2,695,000 workmen, to whom the provisions of the bill might apply. It was clear, that if councils of conciliation were established, there must be one for every separate branch of trade. A council of conciliation for bricklayers, for example, could not adjudicate upon the disputes of smiths or carpenters. By the 6th clause it was proposed, that, for the purposes of the act, each person, being twenty-one years of age, belonging to the trade having a license for a council, and being an inhabitant householder or part occupier of any house, who had resided and been a master or workman in such trade within the limits of the place in which a council of conciliation was formed, was entitled to be registered as a voter, and qualified to be elected a member of the council. Thus the Legislature was asked to constitute a multitude of small Parliaments, elected by the universal suffrage of all those engaged in trade, who had only to shew that their names were on the registry in order to have the right to vote. The expense of these proceedings would be considerable, and how were they to be borne? There must be a clerk of registration, and how was he to be paid? The bill contained no provisions on this point; but the witnesses examined before the select committee admitted that the working of the act must be attended with considerable expense. Something was said about defraying the expense out of the rates; or, if that were objected to, throwing them upon the Consolidated Fund. The latter proposal was not likely to obtain the consent of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, nor would the magistrates in quarter sessions feel disposed to meet the expenses out of the county rates. That some alteration and amendment might be made in the present law on this subject he did not deny. Those defects, however, would be in no degree remedied by such a measure as the present, and would be, in his opinion, rather aggravated than cured by councils of conciliation chosen under the machinery of the present bill. For these reasons he trusted that their Lordships would not agree to the second reading of the bill; and that, in the words of a series of carefully-drawn objections to the bill, they would not pass "a hastily-prepared and ill-digested measure, which would probably be attended by disastrous consequences." The noble lord concluded by moving that the bill be read a second time on that day three months.

The Earl of Derby said that his noble friend who had just spoken had stated various objections to the machinery and provisions of the bill; but at the same time he had admitted that the existing law, although not so wholly inoperative as had been supposed, was nevertheless capable of improvement and amendment. For himself, he felt disposed to give a favourable consideration to a measure intended to obviate the mischiefs arising from disputes between masters and the employed. He was the more inclined to vote for the second reading of a bill which was supported by so high an authority as that of his noble and learned friend, (Lord St. Leonards), which had been a matter of long and serious consideration, and which was, moreover, the result of an almost unanimous declaration of opinion by a select committee of the other House. He did not pretend to say that the bill would not in many points require very careful consideration in committee. His noble and learned friend had himself pointed out several provisions that required to be amended in committee, some of which had arisen per incuriam, and others in which alterations of an injurious character had been made in committee of the other House. The bill, also, was not free from errors in point of grammar, particularly in the 3rd and the 6th clauses. There were a number of points in the bill which required consideration apart from the principle, for, recollecting that it had been examined by more than one select committee, the bill had appeared with a singular infelicity of expression. At the same time it did, to some extent, meet an evil which was a great and crying one. Therefore, although he was not prepared to deny, even if the second reading were agreed to, that it would be expedient to refer it to a select committee to examine its phraseology and provisions, with a view to render it more acceptable as a legislative act, considering the high authority by which the principle of the bill was supported, the confessed inadequacy of the present law, and the strong desire which was represented to exist among masters and workmen to find some machinery that should remedy the defects of the present law, he would be sorry that their Lordships should summarily reject the bill upon its second reading, and thereby not postpone it for careful consideration, but prevent that consideration being given to it. He would be prepared to support the second reading, but he believed the bill would require serious examination and consideration before he could assent to a third reading.

Lord Granville said, if the question were put for or against the bill in its present shape, he should vote with the noble baron opposite, (Lord Ravensworth), because, upon the admission of all parties, there never was a bill so imperfectly drawn as that which they were considering. In a bill relating to such a delicate matter as the relations between masters and workmen the utmost correctness and nicety of expression were particularly necessary; but this bill was admitted to be so imperfect that it was clear the noble and learned lord had not examined it very minutely before he introduced it. This was a subject on which the working classes took a deep interest, and he would be sorry that the House should appear to treat it lightly or in a summary manner. If he had been rightly informed, however, this bill had been before the other House in three successive sessions, but had failed to pass until the present session, when it was read a third time, the withdrawal of the Reform Bill having given an earlier opportunity than was expected. He did not believe that the bill could be properly considered in the whole House, and therefore he would submit to the noble and learned lord whether it would not be well to refer it to a select committee, in order, if possible, to convert it into a practical measure.

The Lord Chancellor said, that if the bill in its present shape should pass into law, he should rejoice that he was no longer Lord Chief Justice, for a great part of that functionary's time would be occupied in hearing applications for writs of mandamus, of prohibition, and of certiorari arising out of this bill. In fact, the bill would not work at all, and would only make "confusion worse confounded;" but he agreed that it was not desirable to appear to treat the subject lightly, and, in assenting to the second reading, he would urge upon his noble and learned friend the propriety of referring it to a select committee.

Lord Ramsden was willing to withdraw his amendment, upon the understanding that the bill be referred to a select committee.

Lord St. Leonards assented to that course.

The amendment was accordingly withdrawn, and the bill was read a second time.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS.

In 12mo., price 14s. cloth.

THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

"This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 14, 1860.

A BILL was some time since introduced into the Upper House of Parliament, by Lord Brougham, to enable the accused parties in criminal cases to offer themselves as witnesses, and, in that event, render them subject to cross-examination like other witnesses. This bill having been received unfavourably, his Lordship has just introduced a fresh one, by way of substitute for it, which proposes to accord this faculty to accused persons in cases of misdemeanour only. The principle involved in both bills is a most important one, being at variance with the theory and practice of English law from the earliest times; and the question is a branch of a more general one, which has recently been discussed at the Juridical Society, viz. whether the rule of law which prohibits the examination and cross-examination of accused persons in criminal cases is a sound one. It is a question of great difficulty and importance, and much may be urged on both sides.

The advocates on the one side argue as follows:—The rule of law which excluded from bearing testimony not only the parties to suits, but so many witnesses, on the several grounds of infamy, interest in the event of the suit, &c., has been condemned in modern times as wrong in principle. That rule was energetically attacked by Bentham, who laid down as a sacred principle of judicature, that it is the duty of courts of justice to use all available means of getting at the truth of the matters in question, and consequently reject no medium which could tend to help them to that truth; and the Legislature has adopted this view by abolishing, first, the incompetency of witnesses, and afterwards that of the parties in civil causes, leaving the case of the accused parties on criminal trials almost the sole remaining fragment of the ancient rule, which ought to follow the fate of the others. One reason given for the rule—namely, that the allowing the examination of accused persons would induce a vast amount of perjury—is a weak and insufficient one, and leads to this injustice, that the witnesses for the prosecution depose on oath against the accused, while his mouth is stopped from contradicting them. The accused, being the person best acquainted with the fact of his own guilt or innocence, is naturally the best source to apply to for information on the subject. If he is guilty, a well-conducted cross-examination will wring the fact from him, to the furtherance of public justice; while, if he is innocent, he has nothing to fear from any cross-examination, however severe. And, lastly, in accordance with these views, we find that a rigid interrogation of the accused forms an important part of every criminal trial in France and other continental countries.

On the other side it is urged that the rule laid down by Bentham, however sound as a general principle, is not of universal application, and must be understood with these limitations—first, that by the means of getting at the truth of the matters in dispute must be understood such means as are likely to extract it in causes in general, and not merely in some particular ones; and, secondly, that those means be not such as would give birth to collateral evils outweighing the benefit of any truth they extract. Instances might easily be quoted from Bentham's works in which he has admitted, though perhaps unintentionally, the existence of these exceptions; and numerous ones are to be found in the judicial practice of all countries where evidence, valuable in itself, is rejected on the ground of the great mischiefs that would result from receiving it; such as secrets of State, confidential communications made by clients to their counsel, evidence too remote to be received without forming dangerous precedents, &c. Admitting, therefore, that an interrogation of the accused would in some cases extract truth, which would be sought for in vain without it—an admission which, as all systems have their advantages and disadvantages, may be made in favour of torture, judicial expurgation, trial by ordeal, &c.—still, if the general effect of the practice would be to give birth to any collateral evils outweighing the advantage derived in these particular instances, the practice should have no place in an enlightened system of judicature. It is a fallacy to look on the accused in the light of a witness; the line of demarcation between them has always been recognised even under the most conflicting systems—as, for instance, the English one, which will not allow the accused to be questioned; and the French one, which, while it subjects the accused to a severe, and often most unfair, interrogation, does not put him on his oath, or treat him as a witness in any respect. And there is good reason for this. The accused, whose conduct is the subject in question before the tribunal, and whose life or liberty depends on the result of the proceedings, stands in a very different position, and does not speak under the same sanctions of truth as the witness, who is a third person coming before it to give information on the matters in dispute. The latter has not the same strong interests to pervert the truth, and speaks with the terror of a prosecution for giving false testimony before his eyes—a terror at which the man whose life or liberty is at stake would only smile. The reason for rejecting the testimony of accused persons is not, as suggested, to prevent individuals incurring the guilt of perjury; for oaths, however beneficial, are not essential to the existence of a court of justice, and the reasons for receiving or rejecting such testimony would equally apply whether they were in use or not. The argument, that under the existing practice a prisoner's mouth is stopped, is a mis-statement of the law; for he is not only allowed, but invited, to say what he pleases in his defence; and, what is more, is accorded a favour which is accorded to no other litigant party, namely, that if he makes an exculpatory statement of facts, the jury are to take it into their consideration, and acquit him if they believe it; whereas all other litigants are held strictly to prove their allegations by evidence. The rejection of the testimony of accused persons rests, chiefly at least, on a different principle from that of interest, being founded on the maxim, which runs through the whole English law, "Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere"—a maxim framed not with the view of sheltering guilty persons, as is sometimes represented, but of protecting innocent ones, and carrying out the general policy of the laws. There is an essential difference between civil and criminal cases. A civil case is a dispute between private individuals, who may dispose of their own rights as they please; a criminal one is an affair between the accused and society, whose laws he is charged with having broken; and public policy requires that his conviction should be based, not merely on a preponderance of probability, as in civil cases, but on a moral certainty of his guilt, which can only be expected from independent testimony borne against him, or his own voluntary statements. It is also a mistake to say that an innocent person has nothing to fear from cross-examination, especially when we remember that it would necessarily be conducted by a person vastly his superior in legal knowledge, and probably in natural capacity likewise, and who might or might not conduct it honestly and fairly. Such a process would often extract falsehood instead of truth; for when a man is suspected of crime, there is a natural tendency in the human mind to run after real or supposed admissions of guilt, and jump to conclusions from them; while weakness of nerves would frequently lead innocent men, but very rarely criminal ones, to falter and become confused in their answers; and to expect that even innocent men would not, under the tremendous pressure upon them, occasionally yield to the temptation of giving false or equivocating answers, and so work their own destruction, is putting too severe a strain on frail human nature. But although evidence extracted from the accused against his will cannot generate that moral certainty on which alone it is safe to act, it can, and is pretty sure to, generate sympathy in his favour, and thus shake public confidence in the administration of the law; while the opposite course, of holding the prosecution strictly to proof of the charge, encourages confidence in the law; and the hearty co-operation of society in its enforcement. The practical result of the suggested course would be to put the burthen of proof on the wrong party; so that when a man became suspected of a crime, instead of searching carefully for evidence against him, as is the case at present, all efforts would be made to escape the necessity of adducing proof by extracting from his own lips something to his prejudice; and mistaken convictions, especially where prosecutions are unfounded, or the result of malice or conspiracy, would be the frequent consequence. For these, and perhaps other reasons, the English law deems it the safest course to allow every accused person to defend himself in his own way, and enable him to say to his accuser, "If I have done evil, bear witness of the evil."
